DANIEL CONY.

WOBURN, Mass., May, 1880.

"THE CONSENSUS OF THE COMPETENT."

A friend has sent me a copy of the Boston Investigator, bearing date April 21, in which he has marked an article, written by J. S. Verity of Cambridgeport, criticising the third section of Mr. Abbot's seventh "ethical law," which appears each week on the editorial page of THE INDEX. The writer admits the first two sections, namely:—

"1. The private judgment of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns."

"2. The social reason of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals."

He believes the "third section to be far more complicated than the other two," namely:—

"3. The social reason of society is represented in each particular case by the consensus of the competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided."

To show how entangled Mr. Verity is in "complicated" interpretation of the above section, I quote: "It seems dreadfully silly, strange, and absurd to see liberals and reformers advocating the 'consensus of the competent,' or submission to the will of the majority, right or wrong." On this basis, he charges Mr. Abbot with a violation of the majority rule in the "two memorable conflicts at Syracuse." It appears clear to me that, when Mr. Abbot dissented from a majority Unitarian vote, as he did on a question requiring the exercise of the private judgment of each individual member of that assemblage, he was in accord with section first, which Mr. Verity approves. With regard to the second conflict, there is no evidence of such a consensus in the action of the majority favoring the repeal of the Comstock laws, as Mr. Abbot should in good faith abide by. There was some wisdom in this world outside the Syracuse meeting of liberals.

On what ground does Mr. Verity assume that Mr. Abbot and his fellow-liberals advocate a "submission to the will of the majority, right or wrong"? He does not find it in section three. Its plain English cannot be distorted to sustain him in any such assumption. Mr. Abbot would not trifle with the good judgment of liberals by formulating that doctrine. His position in regard to the liberal organizations to-day is due to his sturdy defence of private judgment, as well as his graceful deference to that "consensus of the competent" defined in section three.

Society must be governed, and obey laws. Mr. Verity knows the consensus of the competent has established the fact of the immensity of the universe, as compared with the globe we live upon, and also the fact that it is a globe. It has agreed upon a catalogue of crimes,—bearing false witness, theft, adultery, murder,—by a decided majority. The mode of affixing the penalty is an open question, but not so the necessity of a penalty. Any repeal or addition to the statutes is subject to the same tribunal. The circulation of obscene literature is under its ban. Mr. Verity does not complain of the tyranny of an official who secures the conviction of a murderer; with no better grace, can he denounce the punishment of the purveyors of corrupt literature, or the abridgment of their individual liberty. Mr. Verity daily and hourly, consciously or unconsciously, obeys the consensus of the competent. I venture to assert that he has full faith that it is about to finally pass upon open questions, because of the increase of knowledge, and his confidence in man's innate love of truth and purity. He hears the individual voices around him, that, united, will be heard throughout the land, FOR THE RIGHT.

Says Mr. Verity, in conclusion: "Shall we, the freethinkers and liberals of America, submit to the cruel and unjust laws of the Orthodox Christian bigots, or shall we stand by the right and suffer the consequences?" Mr. Verity and Mr. Abbot, with like vigorous determination to stand by the right, submit their views to the consensus, and, rejecting the Christian doctrine of man's total depravity, look hopefully for decisions for the right. The consensus is in the lead of the progressive and reformatory impulses of mankind.

EMERSON BENTLEY.

[The trouble with the Investigator, the Truth Seeker, and various other professedly liberal journals, is that they do not wish to understand what we mean, but eagerly snatch at all possible opportunities of perverting our meaning, so as to create prejudice against THE INDEX, weaken its influence, and secure the ascendancy of the libertine-element in all liberal organizations. For this reason, we have long since ceased to pay any regard to their studied and persistent distortions of our principles and aims. This is a severe judgment; but no long time will elapse before it will be universally perceived to fall far short of the truth. To those who really are perplexed as to the "consensus of the competent," we would say that they will get great light by pondering this question: why is it that the "right" to do as one pleases" is justly restricted by the proviso, "so long as one does not infringe upon the rights of his neighbors"? If Individualism is right and private judgment unlimited, then the individual can do as he pleases without any restriction; and that familiar proviso, enforced by law and acquiesced in by all but consistent Individualists, is the proof of the truth of our position as to the "Consensus of the Competent."—ED.]

WHO ARE ATHEISTS?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Hon. Sir,—At my age (seventy-five), I may say, in all the thousand times, more or less, that I have heard Psalms lili., first clause of the first verse, quoted, I have never once, as I think, known the sense originally designed by the passage to have been actually given to it. If, among the readers to whom these sentences may come, there shall be one who can discern no difference between "saying with one's speech" and "saying in the heart," to that person I shall be unable to convey what I regard as the true sense of the passage.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God."

Some months since a very sensible article appeared in THE INDEX, headed, "Who are Infidels?" I wish in this article very earnestly to inquire who are atheists. But, as this inquiry arose to my mind unsought, I shall have in getting my thoughts before the reader more frequently to speak of myself than is pleasant in a public article. Hence I ask forbearance.

In my sixteenth year, there came to my notice a case where a person's oath in a civil suit was denied him on the accusation that he was an atheist. As the person was highly esteemed by me, on account of repeated kindnesses, I immediately went to his mechanic shop and asked him directly if he denied the existence of a God. "I believe in God," he said, "but deny the existence of such a partial being as the churches teach to me." Of a taciturn make, he added no more. I knew him to be a money-lender, but he would never take a cent of unlawful interest: indeed, to make him such an offer was to insure no dealing with the person so offering.

Some months later, I attended in a neighboring town a conference meeting, and listened to the prayer and exhortations of Mr. S., a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of that town, whom, taking his words and public appeals into account, I confess I regarded a very pious man, not denying to him what he claimed himself to be, a perfect man, one enjoying holiness of heart; indeed, for the time, I gladly so esteemed him, as I was then in the same fraternity. Not long after, I had occasion on business to pass his dwelling, a farm-house of moderate pretensions on the east side of the road, and facing a large barn on the west side, from the north and south ends of which extended shingled sheds. From the corners of these, on the road, was built a fence, so high and tight that it could neither be seen over nor through. The uncommon appearance of that fence, gate and all, attracted my attention; hence I inquired of a neighbor of his what meant that fence before Mr. S.'s barn. In true Yankee style, he asked, "Don't you know?" "Of course not," said I, "as I never saw its like before." This Yankee answer excited still stronger curiosity. He then said, "That fence means fourteen per cent." The answer blinded me still more. Then he said plainly: "If any one wants money of S., he goes to his house, and lets his wants be known, specifying the sum he desires, and is given by S. to understand, if he brings into that enclosure a yearling heifer, a steer, a cow, or yoke of oxen, a lumber wagon, or coach, or any other material fully equal to seven per cent. interest (then the rate in this State), he might then go into his house and give an approved note or mortgage fully securing the payment of the money lent at lawful interest, and receive the desired amount. If the money was wanted another year, he must make behind that fence another like deposit to secure its extension." Thus Mr. S. made himself practically utterly unlike the living God, who giveth to all liberally; and practically said in his heart, whatever his lips might say, "There is no God."

The love of money, which is well said in Scripture to be the root of all evil, in its corrupting, blinding influence, is the bed-rock stratum of practical atheism. For be it known the living God never made an atheist, a practical atheist. This man had his mouth full of the name of God, while in his heart, by his practical unloveliness to his neighbors, many of whom in his sight apparently unpitied went down to financial ruin, he virtually made oath there was none in existence,—none at least whose laws he revered. He who cares not practically for the welfare of mankind is the man who says in his heart, by that very carelessness, "There is no God," and is essentially the veriest atheist known. In Scripture, the persons who say with their lips there is no God are comparatively unnoticed there; those only are noticed who practically say it in their hearts, as S. did.

If any dissent from this view of the subject, let them freely speak out, and I will hear.

Very respectfully, L. D. TANNER.

JESTINGS.

A BALD-HEADED clergyman took for his text, "The hairs of our head are all numbered."

"ROPE CONFERRED maketh my heart sick," said a condemned murderer as he eyed the scaffold.

IF YOU DON'T happen to remember the name of your dressmaker, speak of her as Miss Sew-and-sew. —Funny Folks.

AN AMERICAN lady recently said that she was going to Europe in a thoroughly artistic way to attend "the saloons of Paris."

CUTTING.—Customer: "I—aw—want my—aw—moustaches dyed." Artist: "Yes, sir—certainly, sir. Brought 'em with you, sir?"

"NOW THIS is what I call business," remarked a Brooklyn undertaker, as an unfortunate gentleman stepped into his store and died.

"LIKE FATHER, like son," as the young lady remarked, when she decided to accept the young man for sake of the old man's money.

A KANSAS weekly publishes "fourteen rules to be observed during a tornado." Only one is necessary: Be somewhere else.—Boston Post.

AN ENGLISH traveller in the Holy Land, it is said, has discovered Jacob's well. There has been a rumor afloat that Jacob was dead.

SAID THE Arkansas man: "I respect religion, but can you fairly expect me to attend church when there is a circus in town demanding support?"

A LAZY BOY was complaining that his bed was too short, when his father sternly replied, "That is because you are always too long in it, sir."

"STEALING the delivery stable of heaven to serve the devil in," is the way an honest Michigan deacon got it off in church.—Detroit Free Press.

A KNOWLEDGE of cooking is not essential to the happiness of a bride and groom, but it is a handy thing to fall back on after the honeymoon.

"PLEASE TO UNDERSTAND," said the Honorable Billy the other day, "I'm not such a fool as I look." "No," said Bob, "that would be too much."

AT A RECENT railroad festival, the following striking sentiment was given: "Our mothers,—the only faithful tenders who never misplaced a switch."

WE HEAR of a man who has made a fortune by attending to his own business! This is authentic. But then he had few competitors.—Boston Transcript.

A HOME MISSIONARY was asked the cause of his poverty. "Principally," said he, with a twinkle in his eye, "because I have preached so much without notes."

INTELLIGENT SERVANT.—Bridget (to caller): "Will ye kape still a minit while I look at ye?—No, Missis hain't at home. She told me if a woman come with a wart on the end of a red nose to say she wa'n't at home, and there's no mistaking that wart."

THE CLERK of a country club, who was a school-master, being called on to give a toast, produced the following: "Addition to the friends of old England, subtraction of her wants, multiplication of her blessings, division among her foes, and reduction of her debts and taxes."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "	"
" 26 " 51 "	5 "	"
" 52 "	5 "	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenstein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Gardin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, twenty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, rights for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Alcott Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	1.50
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupids and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLDS (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Paul and Protestantism, with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	3.00
Isaiah XL-LXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.75
French Eclogues.....	1.50
French Poems.....	2.00
Bible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	2.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.50
Physics and Politics.....	1.25
Lombard Street.....	1.00
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science. The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	1.50
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Longer Descriptive and Inductive. 1 vol.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	2.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (WM. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different Forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Orchids.....	1.75
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPEL (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.....	3.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede, illustrated.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.00
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols. The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creed and Conduct.....	1.00
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.75
Rising and Settling Faith.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbeliever.....	1.00
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each 10c.....	1.00
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the New Faith.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.50
Safest Creed.....	1.00
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Werther's Letters. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE, compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition, with Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Part III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. With two illustrations.....	2.00
Wendholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
Alone Alone.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Skirmishes and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper cover.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.....	1.00
Bits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nell's Silver Lining. A Story of Colorado and Utah. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Old-Fashioned Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiology, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance," to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Amusement, or, Walking, Swimming, and Plying with a Dissecting Knife on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Amos.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Crookes.....	2.00
XV. Fungi. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By Francis Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesosomes. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Theory of Sound. By J. Neuberger.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	3.00
KNAPPET (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I. and II. Per vol.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Thru the Forest.....	1.50
Fireside Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Desert.....	1.50
The Camp in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and Apes. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	1.25
Lessons from Nature as Illustrated in Mind and Matter.....	2.00
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Per vol.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Unit. Essays on the Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	.60
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.60
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.25
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
Poetic Studies.....	1.50
The Story of a Year.....	1.50
Trotty's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plans, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Universal Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	8.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.35
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	.30
Vols. III, IV, and VI., each.....	.30
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	.60
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Equal Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTYER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....	2.00
Child Life.....	.30

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

331 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen to whatever political party he may be attached to, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,

THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR LADIES and GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped to Hinder Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Oalf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsey Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $5.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27th YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
 2. Max Müller.
 3. Emerson.
- For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D. C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 544.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND} {CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

LAST TUESDAY, May 25, Ralph Waldo Emerson was seventy-seven years old. Every true American heart does him reverence in his serene and beautiful old age, and turns to him with inexpressible gratitude for all that he has been and is to his generation—first in life, first in literature, and first in the love of all who love their fellow-men.

STURDY OLD JOHN KNOX once said: "I am in that place in which it is demanded of me to speak the truth; and the truth I will speak, impugn it whoso lists." An infusion of this spirit is the only thing that can save the liberals as a class from deserved public contempt, in view of the fact that so many of those who misrepresent themselves as liberals are ostentatiously worshipping the Copper Calf.

MISS EMILY J. LEONARD, of Meriden, Connecticut, has just published, through the Putnams, a translation of Blanqui's History of Political Economy in Europe, a very valuable and useful work, in an octavo volume of nearly six hundred pages. Miss Leonard has not infrequently written for THE INDEX, and her friends among its readers will appreciate the important service she has rendered to American literature.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM JAMES, in a very striking paper on "The Sentiment of Rationality" (published in Mind), makes this delicately humorous comment on Materialism, as a pseudo-philosophy: "The ordinary half-educated materialist comforts himself against idealists by the notion that, after all, thought is such an obscure, mystical form of existence that it is almost as bad as no existence at all, and need not be seriously taken into account by a sensible man."

THE Literary World of May 22 is almost wholly devoted to Mr. Emerson, whose seventy-seventh birthday it thus specially honors. It contains charming articles on the great seer by C. A. Bartol, T. W. Higginson, F. H. Hedge, Walt Whitman, George William Curtis, F. B. Sanborn, W. B. Hill, G. W. Cooke, and E. P. Whipple,—poems by Margaret J. Preston, Lucy Larcom, W. S. Shurtleff, Rose Terry Cooke, Charlotte F. Bates, W. L. Shoemaker, P. H. Hayne, and H. Rich,—and a full bibliography of his works. Every lover of Emerson ought to possess this treasure, which can be got by sending ten cents to E. H. Hames & Co., P. O. Box 1183, Boston. The Literary World deserves the thanks of the community by universal acclamation for the public service it has thus rendered.

WE ARE ASKED to give notice to our friends in town and country who propose attending the Convention of the Free Religious Association that the Festival Committee have made arrangements to furnish them with a good lunch at a reasonable price, in the lower hall, between the morning and afternoon sermons, as well as a good tea after the close of the sessions; so that they can remain comfortably all day in the building, if they desire to do so. The evening festival will, it is hoped, be more than usually social and pleasant, as the Athenæ Quartette have kindly consented to give some of their charming songs without accompaniment, while Mr. Adler's hymn will be sung with the organ to Luther's Choral. Invitations may be obtained by application to the committee at the Hall during the day.

SAYS THE Christian Register: "The Alliance is a very fair paper, but in the following criticism is it not a little unreasonable? 'The chief organ of the denomination glorifies Channing, but has no editorial protest against the free religionists—free of religion, and very free with it, as has been said—or against the non-Christians who mainly support it.' Why, in doing honor to those with whom we agree, is it always necessary to abuse those with whom we differ? Must we never speak a word in praise of Jesus, unless we have a fling at Judas?" This is kindly meant, no doubt. But since the "free religionists" are likened to "Judas" by the Register itself, they will probably feel like the sleeping man whose friend the bear, attempting to kill a fly that disturbed him, brought down a paw so ponderously as to mash his head.

MR. JOHN L. STODDARD, our occasional editorial contributor, who sailed for Europe last Saturday, May 22, has marked out for himself a highly interesting course, and one that can hardly fail to be fruitful in most enjoyable lectures next fall. During his journey, he will visit the lakes and mountains of Scotland and Ireland, explore the beauties of the French and Spanish Pyrenees, stop at Malmaison, the home of Josephine, Nîmes, Arles, and Avignon, full of evidences of former Roman, Gallic, and Papal occupancy, and now bristling with modern life; Lourdes, to which the recent apparition of the Virgin has drawn such crowds of pilgrims; and Marseilles, the Paris of Southern France. Thence to Italy, visiting for the third time many beautiful and historic places which, though familiar to him, he has never lectured upon. Thence to the region of the Bavarian Alps, and among Italian lakes and wonderful mountain passes, attending while there the Passion-Play of Ober-Ammergau, his description of which, it is safe to say, will not be excelled by any one who will see it, and for the illustration of which he has made special arrangements. Afterward his course will be along the Danube, through Austria and Hungary, reproducing the lovely scenery and historic castles found on its banks.

THE Nation speaks with appreciation of Col. Stickney's article, reprinted in THE INDEX of May 13: "Mr. Albert Stickney, whose recently published A True Republic displayed a marked tendency to political speculation of a more radical sort than is generally indulged in by American writers, contributes a paper on 'Government Machinery' to the May number of the International Review which leaves a similar impression. The evils which he finds in our present system of managing public affairs are familiar, though Mr. Stickney's presentation of them is unusually pointed and comprehensive at the same time. He does not mind saying that we entirely pervert the true function of popular elections, which is 'the mere selection of the few men who are to be at the head of our affairs.' The great trouble being to get officials who will attend strictly to their duties, what we need is 'a machinery for putting men out, not for putting men in.' 'Instead of continually using the process of election, we should simply hold in suspense the process of removal.' This would at once fix responsibility, and would naturally concentrate an office-holder's attention upon his official functions rather than on schemes for reelection. If this plan should prove impracticable, and if the people, after the destruction of the present powerful party organizations, cannot be trusted to choose proper representatives, 'then,' says Mr. Stickney, 'we must give up free government.' There is no difficulty about finding good men, he is sure: the present holders of public office would be good enough 'under a decent system.' If Mr. Sherman, Mr. Blaine, and Mr. Conkling could be released to-day from 'their grinding slavery to the election machine,' we should have within five years the 'finest civil service on the face of the earth.' If anybody cries centralization, Mr. Stickney says it is the order of nature wherever affairs are vast; centralization of power being inevitable, centralization of responsibility is demanded as a safeguard. A certain pre-emptoriness, illustrated in such statements as that 'Mr. John Sherman four years since knew no more about finance than he did about Sanskrit,' is possibly inimical to persuasiveness, but it does not operate to obscure Mr. Stickney's meaning or make it less suggestive."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.....Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX. W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT. C. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCHER, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Ader.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. OLARK, Wiltonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMEMMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCOIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

Chartered by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson O. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUEBDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, case, N. Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N. Y. wauckee, Ill.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, Mass.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. ROPE WHIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
 B. R. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Al-cuse, N. Y. JOHN W. TRUEBDELL, Syra-bany, N. Y.
 EBBEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 E. A. SAWTELL, Boston, Mass. W. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N. Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N. Y. O. D. R. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mass. D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

Moral Motives in the Gospels.

A SERMON PREACHED AT THE LANGHAM HALL, LONDON, APRIL 4, 1880.

BY REV. CHARLES VOYSEY.

MATT. xii., 37.—"By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

In the following letter, Professor Newman calls my attention to a grave omission in my recent criticism on Principal Shairp's essay on the Moral Motive Power:—

"DEAR MR. VOYSEY,

"I have read with interest your sermons on Principal Shairp. What is to me a striking omission in your criticism leads me to ask whether you differ from me in judgment, or whether your omission rises from the pressure of other arguments (for we cannot always say everything), or indeed from some reason of expediency.

"The topic omitted is this: Principal Shairp wishes to make the prudential arguments for conduct quite secondary, and hardly counts them moral. I agree with him; they are like Paul's 'carnal ordinances'—'elements of the world,' precepts for one who is in the state of a slave, not yet understanding that he is a son. But this is and always has been my objection to the greater part of the teaching of Jesus. When I believed myself a Christian, and that all his words must be perfect, I (with other friends) attributed the great inferiority of his moral teaching to that of Paul and Peter to some mysterious inability to promulgate pure and high morals until after his death and resurrection. But that in his teaching the prudential arguments assume an offensive prominence was a fact visible to me from my earliest years. If I wrote against Principal Shairp, I should certainly press him with this topic, as I have pressed it in my little tract, Religion not History."

Professor Newman needs no words of mine to commend his utterances to your serious attention. His thoughts and words are already so much part and parcel of our work and form of worship that whatever he says on religious themes at once commands our respect, and will receive careful thought, whether we agree with his conclusions or not. But there are far stronger reasons for weighing his words than those of even strong personal attachment. He is the only public teacher, claiming any eminence, who has adopted a particular line of criticism in regard to Jesus, and who has insisted upon it in spite of every inducement to leave it alone. In my humble way, I have endeavored to tread in his steps; and should it prove at length that we have been maintaining the truth, and fighting for it, one may say, against the whole of Christendom, our singular course will assuredly be justified by a grateful posterity. It is on this ground that I feel urged not to shirk a responsibility suggested by our venerable friend, but to lose no time in making good the flaw occasioned by the omission which he has pointed out.

I may reply at once to his questions as to the cause of the omission: The topic was not prominently before my mind in writing those discourses on Principal Shairp's essay. I surely had quite enough to think of in those few salient points—the God-head of Jesus, the Atonement, the Resurrection, and the infallibility of the Gospel records, on whose authority those dogmas rest. Now that I am reminded of it, I see the utmost importance of adding to what has been already said some criticism of the moral teaching of Jesus, especially as to his almost universal appeal to prudential motives. If, as Principal Shairp says, these prudential motives are unworthy ones, are at all events secondary, and not to be confounded with motives which are purely moral, and if his repudiation of such prudential motives brings him especially into harmony with ourselves, it may be regarded as a failure in duty if we neglect to press upon his notice that the prudential motives were most largely and commonly used by Jesus himself. In plainer words, that Jesus habitually did what Principal Shairp earnestly and eloquently bids his fellow-teachers not to do.

And, before I proceed to verify this charge, it is right to remind you of the circumstances under which we are placed. Jesus is believed to have been God himself, and therefore to have been an all-wise and infallible moral teacher of men. Even by those who no longer believe in his deity, he is still spoken of as Divine; and many who are sure he was only human are angry and impatient at a single word spoken against the theory of his moral perfection. Only this week has appeared in the Modern Review an article by the Rev. Dr. Abbot upon the Rev. Dr. Martineau's estimate of Jesus as given in his two volumes, entitled Hours of Thought. Dr. Abbot the Churchman quotes with an enthusiastic delight the following passages, which reveal Dr. Martineau the Unitarian in his nearest approximation to Orthodoxy, or rather to those feelings of devout adoration for Christ which it is the aim of Orthodoxy to cultivate and to deepen:—

"So far as Jesus Christ was 'the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever,' so far is he the emblem of Deity."

"In Christ, God was personally there giving expression to his spiritual nature, as in the visible universe to his casual power."

"He (i.e., God) embodied his affections and his will in the person of the Son of Man."

Elsewhere, Dr. Martineau calls Christ "An Image of Perfection," "A Divine Word," "The Master-Spirit whose title to us we know to be entire."

This is the kind of language with which Christian confessions are saturated. The air is full of it. Modern hymns have no other theme. Few have any idea what a hindrance this Christ-worship presents to the progress of Natural Religion or the true worship of the Father. Such is the fact. Jesus needs no defenders. He is the last object left unassailed in all the idols of Christendom. Even the atheist will not pick up a stone to cast at it. Now if all this were reversed, if Jesus were unfairly assailed by detractors, I should be among the first to defend him; if his memory—in so many respects honorable—were in danger of being insulted by slander, I would spare no pains to point out for admiration every lovely trait that could be found in his character; if the world were blindly, unjustly against him, I would surely take his part; if he needed apologies for blemishes incidental to his age and his career, I would diligently find and furnish them; if he were accused falsely, I would do my best to expose and refute his maligners. But all these hypothetical conditions are wanting. The fact is that Jesus occupies a position never before held by any human being. I maintain that that position is a false one; not only false, but in some degree leading to impiety, and, because it is false, putting religion itself into grave peril. In consequence of the wild extravagance with which he is not only lauded, but declared to be absolutely perfect,—standing alone as the infallible Teacher and Judge of the world,—his very errors have been imitated, and the mistakes he made have been exalted to the level of Divine revelation, and revered as the very Word of God. All this adds indefinitely to the paramount importance of finding out the truth about Jesus, and increases beyond measure the responsibility of proclaiming that truth when found.

Nor is this a matter of any great difficulty, much less one of solemn mystery. We have our ground of research before us in an open and very readable book. With rarest exceptions, and then on matters not pertinent to our inquiry, we find little or no ambiguity. The originals have been, on the whole, so fairly translated that we have before us, in the New Testament at least, a very fair and faithful version of the oldest reports extant of what Jesus said and did. Of one thing there is, of course, doubt. We cannot be certain that Jesus did or said all that is there recorded. No one now can ever determine what is truly recorded and what is falsely recorded of him, with absolute certainty. But, if this fact is used against us whenever we point out moral defects in the records, surely we can with equal justice retort that, if the records are not to be trusted in one part, they cannot be implicitly trusted in another. If they may not be true when Jesus predicts his future advent to judge the world, and says that he lived before Abraham, neither may we be sure that they are true in reporting Jesus to have said that the time was coming "when the true worshippers should worship the Father in spirit and in truth"; or, on the cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." If the New Testament be regarded as the sole source of our knowledge of Jesus,—his life and character and sayings,—we must not refuse its statements simply because we do not like them.

This book tells me at once that Professor Newman is perfectly justified in saying that, in the teachings of Jesus, "the prudential arguments assume an offensive prominence."

Perhaps the best way of presenting this to your notice is to give you the one or two exceptions which I think I have found, and which I will, at all events, strain for the purpose:—

"Do good and lend, hoping for nothing again." Though this is followed immediately by the words, "and your reward shall be great," I will take it as an exception. "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven"—where the motive is eminently praiseworthy; namely, the desire to imitate the loving-kindness of God. But this is also followed by the deplorable appeal to prudential motives, "For if ye love them that love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same?"

The third exception is perhaps the most complete, being without any qualification: "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man shall sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also. Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away." The first two of these rules, Christians have invariably set aside; not because no reward is specially promised for obedience to them, but because no reward whatever would induce them to do anything so absurd or so injurious to morality. In the precept, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," we find also the entire absence of the prudential motives; but, upon this, I would observe that it is a paraphrase of the Hebrew Scripture, "Be ye holy, for I am holy," and also that it comes in as a conclusion after a perfect string of precepts, nearly all associated with a promise of reward. Two of the beatitudes are also free from this blemish: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled," and "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

The most perfect of all his sayings is perhaps this: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven,"—the motive being at once pious and unselfish.

These, as far as I can discover, are the only exceptions to the uniform character of the teachings of Jesus. In all the rest we find either a threat of punishment or a promise of reward. If you were to read through consecutively the sayings of Jesus, as I have done more than twenty times, in the excellent compendium of them in a little book called The Divine Teacher, you would be amazed to see how thoroughly saturated was his teaching with these prudential motives.

The Sermon on the Mount, though far from being so purely original as it is supposed to be, is generally regarded, and I think rightly, as one of the best and most characteristic discourses reported in the gospels; and yet, in this short address, we have no less than twenty-three instances of threats and promises. Self-interest is made so prominent a feature in the discourse that we could not obliterate it without destroying by far the greater part.

As I have already, this morning, read part of Professor Newman's commentary upon it, I need not here repeat the criticism in detail, but refer my hearers to the essay, Religion not History. (Trübner and Co.)

His instructions to his disciples whom he sent into the village to preach were likewise thus tainted: "Whosoever will not receive you nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the very dust of your feet for a testimony against them. Verily I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city."

"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell. Yea, I say unto you, fear him."

Then his claim to be accepted as a teacher and a Savior is invariably accompanied by threats or promises: "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven."

"Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward. Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

"He that believeth on him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he believeth not."

"If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."

We must all be familiar with the tone of his denunciations against the chief priests, rulers, Scribes, and Pharisees of his time, which I need not quote.

Demanding of his followers the most absolute renunciation of this world's good, and even the rupture of natural ties of kinship and family, he promises abundance of reward as a compensation; and when his disciples ask him, saying, "Lo, we have left all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" he replies: "Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or land, for my sake and the gospel's, but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time,—houses and brethren and sisters and mothers and children and lands, with persecutions, and in the world to come, eternal life."

To the rich man he says, "Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven."

The parables also contain abundant instances of the same kind of teaching. Among them may be mentioned "The tares and the wheat," "The treasure in a field," "The pearl of great price," "The net that gathered fish of every kind," "The unforgiving debtor," "The rich man who determined to rebuild his barn," "The fig tree," "The great supper," "The unjust steward," "The rich man and Lazarus," "The ten servants and the ten pounds," "The householder and his vineyard," "The wedding garment," "The ten virgins," "The talents," and lastly "The sheep and the goats." In every one of these parables, prudential motives are more or less "offensively prominent." Finally his exhortations to his disciples to watch faithfully for his coming entirely consist of appeals to their sense of danger and to their hope of safety and reward.

"Surely," as Professor Newman observes, "no further illustration is needed to what mean motives appeal is constantly made."

Now if all this were duly recognized by Christian advocates, and acknowledged to be not only inferior to much of the moral teaching of Saints Paul, Peter, and James, but also greatly below that of the so-called "Pagans,"—Aristotle, Zeno, Cicero,—one would not be so ready to find fault with the teaching of Jesus as to find excuses for it. But the very contrary is maintained, and those who expose the true character of the teaching are, if listened to at all, vilified and condemned. Moreover the position occupied by Jesus in the religious feelings of Christians in itself gives undue weight to his teaching, increasing tenfold the influence of his example. And we deliberately say that it is dangerous to the highest standard of virtue to applaud and to deem Divine that which our unfettered conscience condemns. It is in no spirit of pride or sense of superior virtue that we point out these serious flaws in the moral teachings of Jesus. So far from that, it is because we are deeply conscious within ourselves of the natural and inveterate tendency to act from prudential motives, to spoil even our best deeds by casting an eye to some ulterior advantage as a reward for our virtue. We need help and strength on every hand to resist the temptation of mixed or unworthy motives. We never can be quite what we ought to be until the essence of selfishness is wholly extinguished. Therefore it is, before all things, necessary that our religion and the object of our worship and reverence should be of the highest possible standard, and certainly free from those blemishes of which we have been speaking. It does not help us to be told by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews "to look unto Jesus, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of God." We have to endure our cross and to bear the scorn of men for the sake of duty itself, because it is God's will and the right fulfilment of our destiny, and out of pure love for our brethren. All of us, men and women, young and old, are beset from the cradle to the grave by temptations to avoid evil and to do good for the sake of what we may gain by it. The virtue of our boys at school is sorely tried when their one continual aim is to stand well in the good opinion of each other, to make the praise or blame of their school-fellows the universal standard of right and wrong, the law by which every action should be determined. And when we grow up into manhood and live in a larger world we find precisely the same dangers to purest virtue. We have our friends and families to please, our respectability and reputation to preserve; and though these influences are far from being wholly needless, still less wholly evil, yet, if our conduct be only guided by these motives of self-interest, and our choice of actions determined wholly by a regard for men's praise, some day we shall be sure to break down and betray the holiness of our principles. And those who are most often before the public have the hardest struggle to maintain perfect purity of motive and singleness of heart. They may be tempted to base silence when they ought to speak out, through craven fear of reproach; yes, and they may be tempted to speak out—whether it be right to speak out or not—through vain ambition to be called courageous. It cannot be too often remembered—and yet not with any morbid regret—that virtue is always something to be struggled for; something which gives us great trouble and conflict to attain. And even when we think we have done the right action or spoken the right word, the virtue may all be spoilt through the predominance of some inferior motive.

In depreciating Jesus we do not, then, do so in order to exalt ourselves above him, but to help ourselves and others to see clearly that distinction between prudential motives and purely moral ones upon which Principal Shairp so eloquently insists; and, by bringing into prominence the highest and purest motives, to keep ourselves in a wholesome condition of self-scrutiny and aspiration, and thus rise step by step to the stature of perfect manhood, and take our rightful place in the universe as the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

HEREDITY AND AESTHETIC DEVELOPMENT.

BY WILEY BRITTON.

NO. XI.

Let us now turn to painting. Mr. Galton, in his work on Hereditary Genius, has shown that in a list of forty-two celebrated painters, consisting of Italians, Spaniards, and Flemings, twenty-one had illustrious ancestors. Raphael received his first instructions in his profession from his father, who was an artist of rather more than moderate ability. And in the Titian family, in the course of several generations, there were nine painters whose works attested their merits.

In sculpture too, there have been many distinguished artists who inherited aptitudes for their profession. Phidias is supposed to have descended from a family of artists. Ghiberti was the son of a goldsmith, skilled in the manufacture of images and ornaments. Canova belonged to a family that had followed the profession of stone-cutting for several generations; and Thorwaldsen's father was a carver in wood. We could easily mention many other instances in each of the above professions.

But why do not the children of all musicians and the children of all other kinds of artists and professions inherit aptitudes to follow the occupations of their parents? This question will need some explanation. The seed of a thrifty and completely developed plant sown in poor soil or the seed of a stunted plant sown in rich soil is not likely in either case to bring forth a fine plant bearing fine fruit. Or, again, if the soil is too rich for the plant, richer than the variety has usually grown in, as sometimes happens, it will tend to sterility, or to the production of sports, leaf-bearing or sexless shoots. Something similar to this takes place with the human plant. There are many cases of inherited aptitudes to follow particular professions or callings that never become conspicuously developed on account of unfavorable environing conditions to which the individuals are subjected through life. Then there is another class of cases in which, while the environment is favorable for the development of genius in a given direction, the individuals, though their most marked inherited aptitudes are in the required direction, are themselves constitutionally too weak, physically or mentally or both, to ever become very eminent in their profession. And there is also reason to believe that there are cases of inherited aptitudes, in which the individuals, on account of excessive culture, never display the brilliant powers expected of them, and which they might have displayed under proper culture. Where the children of musicians, for instance, do not inherit musical aptitudes, the explanation will probably in nearly every case be found in the fact that both parents were not devoted to music. Hence a child whose parents belong to different professions is as likely to display an aptitude for one profession as for the other. In the families of painters and sculptors there is probably a much smaller number of hereditary aptitudes than among families of musicians. This is doubtless due to the fact that there are fewer unions of couples, both of whom are devoted to the same art, than in the musical profession. It would thus appear that the musical profession rather encourages the unions of couples, where both parties in each couple display musical talents.

What shall we say of those cases where children early display aptitudes for occupations which neither of the parents ever followed? I think that nearly all such cases may be accounted for by atavism; that is, by reappearance of ancestral characters, and by incident forces to which the parents were subject during some portion of their lives before the birth of the children displaying the new peculiarities. Probably almost every one can call to mind an instance in which a child resembled one of its grandparents in features and disposition more strongly than either of its own parents. And in the portrait galleries of some of the old families of Europe, according to the statements of different writers, there are recurrences of ancestral features. The number of generations a physical or mental peculiarity may pass over and then reappear is not known. We only know that every generation it passes over increases the probability against its reappearance. But, if the stripes occasionally seen on the shoulders and legs of foals refer to a remote ancestor that was striped like the zebra or quagga, as Mr. Darwin believes, then it would seem that ancestral characters may reappear after an almost indefinite number of generations have passed. A peculiarity that distinguished only a single remote ancestor will not of course show as strong a tendency to reappear as a peculiarity that was common to all the remote ancestors of an individual.

The prominent mental or physical traits of many individuals are clearly traceable to the actions of incident forces. It excites no astonishment to hear parents connecting a peculiarity, mental or physical, of a child, with some marked event in their own lives. We ought not to be surprised, therefore, if a child's aptitude for music should sometimes be connected with a period in the lives of its parents, though they showed no talents for music, when they were intensely delighted with the opera or musical concerts. Parents who have been constantly surrounded by and keenly appreciate beautiful works of art, even though they are not connoisseurs of the fine arts, there is strong reason for believing, often transmit artistic temperaments, if not indeed artistic aptitudes, to their children. Children's immoral predispositions are also frequently traceable to certain periods in the lives of parents when their actions were less than usual governed by ideal moral principles. Again, the melancholy and vicious dispositions of children are no doubt in many cases connected with melancholy and vicious periods in the lives of their parents.

It will be well to note here that a peculiarity, mental or physical, typical or non-typical, once produced in an individual by an incident force which acted upon its parents, may, if it is useful to the individual in the struggle for existence, be transmitted to successive generations. But, if it is not useful to the individual in the struggle for existence, it will tend to gradually disappear, or to become obscured by more prominent characters.

If aptitudes are hereditary, some will probably say, why do we not see a greater number of the children and grandchildren of celebrated artists following the same professions of their sires and grand-sires? In reply, it may be stated that the number of artists of any given profession in every society is regulated by what is known in political economy as the law of supply and demand. We certainly know now that the greater the number of artists of a given profession in any society, the less profitable will be the profession to each artist, inversely proportionate to merit. An artist, when he sees that his profession is becoming less profitable on account of the increasing numbers of competitors, will likely, even though his children inherit marked tendencies to follow his profession, educate them for professions that hold out prospects of being most profitable. But it is a familiar fact to every one that the children of artists as well as of other professions frequently adopt other occupations, even without special training, if the other occupations promise better remuneration with the same amount of effort.

By means of heredity and selection, skilful breeders do not now doubt their ability to produce in a few generations greatly modified forms in their cattle, horses, and sheep. Pigeon-fanciers calculate the number of years required to produce feathers of a given color, and beak and head of a given form. But, as Mr. Darwin shows, to become a successful breeder requires a discriminating power with which few are gifted. Say that a model head is drawn, and it is desired to have a flock bred with heads of this form, the skilful breeder will be able to accumulate differences inappreciable to the novice. It is well known among artists and art-critics that each artist's pictures have peculiarities which distinguish them from the pictures of other artists.

So also every eminent breeder's flocks gradually acquire characters which distinguish them from the flocks of other breeders. To produce a fine breed of animals, eminent breeders apply what nurserymen call the "roguing" process; that is, they destroy or prevent the multiplication of inferior animals or animals possessing undesirable characters. Among ourselves, a different system holds. The "roguing" process is applied to the destruction of the best instead of the inferior, and the inferior are preserved and allowed or, rather, encouraged to multiply. Suppose that, instead of the million and a half of our best men destroyed during our late war, we had lost an equal number of the most inferior men, we should not as now, when the populace turns out to witness some public demonstration or to celebrate some great event, involuntarily feel like turning away our eyes in sadness, on account of the undue proportion of imperfect faces and figures. If we are thoughtful, we are apt to reflect that great moral victories sometimes cost, not only great sacrifices of life, but also great sacrifices of physique to the living. Indeed, considering the matter in the absence of perfectly reliable data, one might easily be led to believe that our people are gradually undergoing a morphological degeneration. Admitting that such is the case, we may reassure ourselves as to the future, and find some compensation for the physical degeneration.

During the earlier stages of social evolution, superior intelligence and the highest physical development of the individual were the all-important requirements to successful competition in the struggle for existence. The Moral Sense, or sense of right and wrong, as we understand it, scarcely existed. It was only nascent, and influenced men's actions in their dealings with each other to no great degree. Even from the beginning to the climax of the Greek civilization, but little progress was made in the development of the moral sentiments.

Young soldiers could steal their supplies from their friends, and young Spartans waylay and kill Helots without moral degradation and punishment. Infants were examined by a council of elders, and, if found not to come up to a certain standard of perfection, destroyed. The greatest glory a father could achieve, in the estimation of the public and in his own estimation, was to rear children of the highest types of physical perfection, grace, and beauty.

The dominant idea of a Roman from the beginning to the climax of the Roman civilization was strength and grandeur of the social structure. To achieve this result, however, physical perfection of the individual was always a recognized factor. And, since the decline and fall of the Roman civilization, the nations occupying its territory have been floundering in the shoals of moral and religious controversies. Though their actions have not always appeared to us consistent with their teachings, they have, with all their inherited imperfections, recognized and given prominence to the fact that man is endowed with moral sentiments. If the third form of civilization of the descendants of the Aryans, has for its object the development, in its most perfect form, of the moral sense in man, it must be acknowledged that our own generation has witnessed a great triumph in the right direction. Freedom to carry out his plans of life and to enjoy the fruits of his labor, provided he does not trespass upon the equal claims of others in these respects, is now accorded to every man, irrespective of class, color, or nationality. Indeed, the improvement of the moral status of society in the single direction of recognition of equal personal rights is doubtless worth some temporary sacrifice of physique. There are indications that we are approaching a period, not far in the future, when the dominant idea will be to develop an ideally perfect form of social structure, composed of units of the highest types of physical and moral perfection. And, in speaking of an ideal type of life, the terms "physical" and "moral" are already being used a good deal together. The evolution of the moral sentiments has been slow on account of the general ignorance of moral laws. Each generation has therefore transmitted to its descendants nearly as strong a tendency to perform immoral as moral actions. As heredity strengthens or intensifies the interest in physical and moral culture, as it must, we cannot doubt but that their effects will be clearly visible to the student of social science in the course of a few generations. But we must not look for very rapid progress in this direction, since it is impossible to foresee all the perturbations and disturbing influences that may arise, since we know too that in the past social evolution has always been rhythmical,—that is, periods of social progression have been followed by periods of social retrogression. Again, a very considerable number of people are unable continually to bring their conduct or actions into harmony with their conceptions of moral duty, on account of inherited predispositions and tendencies to anti-social actions. Our conceptions of moral duty are also gradually widening, and the ability of individuals to adjust their actions to ideal social requirements steadily increasing. Now, as the moral sentiments come to be more at peace with ethical laws, and the fears of eternal future punishment shall no longer burden men's minds, the expressions will greatly improve; for it will exhibit less indications of moral pain, or what we generally call guilty conscience.

To consider the matter carefully, it seems probable that the belief in and fears of future eternal torments have done more to produce downcast or bad expressions than the whole calendar of crimes. Mr. Buckle, in his examination of the Scotch intellect during the seventeenth century, gives some vivid pictures of the terrors with which the people were afflicted by the preaching of this horrible doctrine. Some of the great revival meetings of more recent times in this country might also furnish many sad illustrations of its effects, if proper inquiry were made. If the expressions of children sometimes show a likeness to certain types of pictures and statues with which their parents were surrounded, and which they greatly admired, can we reasonably doubt that the vivid pictures of fear, remorse, and the agonies of the damned, when deeply impressed upon the minds of believing parents, will also be reflected in the expressions of their children? Even after they have outgrown the belief, it may, in some instance, take generations to obliterate its effects upon the expressions of those whose parents were its victims.

Now, as we get clearer and higher conceptions of moral laws, many of the actions which were formerly regarded as moral will be regarded as immoral, and vice versa. To burn persons believed to be witches and heretics, for instance, was regarded as moral actions by our ancestors. But to burn persons accused of witchery or heresy would now generally be regarded as immoral actions by most of the peoples classed as civilized. And there is strong reason for believing that, with higher intellectual and moral development, there will be an increasing consensus as to what actions are moral and immoral. In fact, the science of ethics is coming to be regarded by many of the clearest thinkers of recent times as resting on as firm a basis as most of the other sciences whose principal laws are unquestioned by the competent.

There is also an increasing interest being manifested in the physical training of children by parents and educators. To torture and deform the body on account of fashionable or religious requirements is being more and more widely condemned. Calisthenic and gymnastic exercises are being introduced into public and private schools more than formerly. Gymnasiums and rational amusements are more popular than a half century ago, and we see an increasing interest manifested in æsthetic culture.

I have thus endeavored to show in this discussion that by heredity it is possible not only to greatly improve æsthetic taste and artistic aptitudes of different kinds, but also the forms and expressions of rising generations. The subject is one that certainly should commend itself to every thoughtful mind interested in the higher development of our race.

PETER AND PAUL.

M. ERNEST RENAN'S LECTURES ON THE LEGEND OF THE ROMAN CHURCH.—A BRILLIANT DISCOURSE.

On April 8, M. Renan delivered in St. George's Hall, Langham Place, London, the second Hibbert lecture on "The Legend of the Roman Church—Peter and Paul." In the first, he endeavored to show the inextricable difficulty in which the Roman Empire found itself in the first century in dealing with religion. In the inevitable death-grapple with Paganism, it was already becoming clearer and clearer that Judaism, under its Christian form, must carry the day. The future belonged to the Jew. The Jewish colony at Rome dated from about B.C. 60. The Israelites multiplied rapidly. Cicero plumed himself on his courage in having resisted them. Cæsar favored them and found them trustworthy. The mob hated them, found them spiteful, and charged them with forming a secret society whose members pushed themselves forward without scruple at the cost of others. But all did not judge thus hastily: the Jews had as many friends as libellers. Juvenal's sneers at the Judaizing ladies of his time proved the literal fulfilment of Zechariah's prophecy, that people would lay hold of the skirts of a Jew and would beg to be led to Zion. The Ghetto of that early age was across the Tiber; hence in the poorest and dirtiest slums of the city, most likely near the modern Porta Portese. The first nucleus of Rome's Jewish population had been freedmen, mostly sprung from prisoners of war brought by Pompey from Jerusalem. They had clung to their religion in spite of their cruel bondage, and their synagogues at Rome had never broken off their relations with Jerusalem. The original colony had been reinforced by many emigrants, who were started in life by their brethren as peddlers, or became adepts in the trade of begging. No Roman who respected himself ever set foot in the quarter, which was a sink of the most despised classes and the most disgusting industries. The police never penetrated into the district save when its squabbles grew too bloody or too frequent. Few quarters of Rome were so free. There were no politics there, and in ordinary times no hindrance to religious rites or proselytism.

A world of ideas was hatching in this 'longshore population, but was lost in the roar of the great city; and the proud patricians who promenaded the Aventine did not dream, when they deigned to look across the Tiber, what a future was preparing in those hovels at the foot of the Janiculum. Near the port was the Taberna Meritoria, a kind of low lodging-house used by soldiers and the like, where the Roman cockneys were shown an oil spring reputed to have gushed from a rock. Afterwards the taberna became a church, and under Alexander Severus there was a lawsuit about the property between the Christians and the guild of innkeepers, and the Emperor adjudged the house to the Christians. We were here plainly on the native soil of an old popular Christianity, which must have been among the number of those "foreign superstitions" against whose encroachments Claudius and his senate took politic precautions in the former half of the first century. It was quite natural, M. Renan argued, that the capital should hear of the name of Jesus long before the evangelization of the intermediate provinces, as that a towering mountain peak should be gilded by the dawn much sooner than the valleys. Rome was the Mediterranean port with which the Syrians had most business. It must be admitted, then, that towards A.D. 50 some Jews from Syria, already Christians, entered the imperial capital, and communicated to their fellows the faith which had already made themselves happy. Nobody then thought that the founder of a new empire, a second Romulus, was then lodging at the port on the straw. Others followed soon, and letters from Syria brought by the new-comers told of a movement which was incessantly spreading. A small group flocked together, everybody smelling of garlic, poor and dirty proletarians,—these ancestors of the Roman prelacy,—unknown, unmannered men, clad in malodorous stable slops, with tainted breath like that of ill-fed people. We know the names of a pious Jewish couple who were mixed up with these movements,—Aquila, originally of Pontus, a tent-maker like Paul, and Priscilla, his wife.

But we ought to see, not in St. Peter's, but in the old Ghetto at the Porta Portese, the birthplace of Western Christendom. Some small chapel ought to have been reared to the two good Jews from Pontus who first syllabled upon the quays of Rome the name of Jesus. One main point to be noted was that the Church of Rome was not, like the churches of Asia Minor, Macedonia, and Greece, planted by Paul. It was a Jewish Christian foundation, directly sprung from the Church of Jerusalem. Here Paul would never be on his own ground: he would see in this great Church many weaknesses, which he would treat indulgently, but which could not fail to wound his exalted idealism. Attached to the circumcision and to externalism, Ebionite in its taste for abstinences, and in its doctrine more Jewish than Christian as to the person and death of Jesus, as well as by its strong attachment to Millenarianism, the Church of Rome presented from its earliest days the essential characteristics which mark it throughout its long and marvellous history. A daughter of Jerusalem in the direct line, the Church of Rome would always bear an ascetic and sacerdotal stamp, opposed to the Protestant tendency of Paul. Peter was always destined to be her real chief; and in the next place, inspired by the political and hierarchical genius of old Rome, she was to become a veritable New Jerusalem, the city of the pontificate, of hierarchical and rubrical religion, of material sacraments justifying of themselves, the city of ascetics. She would be the Church of authority. For her, the only proof of apostolic mission would be a letter signed by the apostles. All the good and all the evil which the Church of Jerusalem did to nascent Christianity the Church of Rome would do to the Universal Church. In vain did Paul write to her his fine Epistle, to expound to her the mystery of the cross of Jesus, and of salvation by faith alone. She understood next to nothing of it. But Luther, fourteen centuries and a half afterwards, was to understand it, and to open a new era in the secular series of the alternate triumphs of Peter and Paul.

M. Renan spoke of St. Paul's arrival at Rome in A.D. 61, for the purpose of prosecuting the appeal he had made to the Emperor, as a great event in the world's history. In his chains there, the apostle of the Gentiles believed that in this event this apostolic career had culminated. It had been preluded by a second apparition of Christ, who had bidden him be of good cheer, assuring him that as he had borne witness of him at Jerusalem, so should he also at Rome. The learned lecturer then gave an elaborate account of what he called the profound divisions of which already, in the first century from the foundation of Christianity, sundered the disciples of Jesus—"so profound," he said, "that all the differences which divided Orthodox folks, heretics, schismatics, in our own days were as nothing compared with the dissensions between Peter and Paul." The views presented were those arrived at by the so-called Tübingen school of ecclesiastical history and theology. The Church of Jerusalem refused communion to all uncircumcised Christians, however pious. Paul, on the contrary, preached that to uphold the old law was to insult Jesus, as implying the insufficiency of his merits for the believer's justification. Jerusalem with its Bishop James, with which church Peter was in close alliance, sent out opposition missions to counter-work those of Paul. Peter, whose rôle in the Judaizing party was that of a kind of timid trimmer between the Ebionite and Pauline extremes, came to Rome with some such intent, and, seemingly, not very long after Paul's arrival there. At the Reformation, the Protestants made a kind of dogma of the denial that he had ever been there, thus dethroning the Pope at once, who claimed the headship of Christendom as the lineal successor of St. Peter. For the Roman Catholic assumption of St. Peter's arrival at Rome in A.D. 42 and his Pontificate there of twenty-three or twenty-four years, M. Renan proved in detail that there was no tangible evidence; while, to mention nothing else, the silence of Paul's Epistle to the Romans (written A.D. 58) and of the closing verses of the Acts was quite conclusive against it. On the other hand, he marshalled a powerful array of arguments for answering in the affirmative the question as to Peter's having visited Rome after Paul. Peter's martyrdom, as attested by extremely ancient evidence, and the somewhat later tradition which connects it with the Neronian persecution at Rome, has all antecedent probability in its favor. The mystical Babylon whence he dates his epistle can only be Rome. It was quite admissible that Peter came to Rome, as he came to Antioch, following on the heels of Paul, and with a view to neutralize his influence. About the year 60, the Christian community was in a state of spiritual excitement, which presented quite a contrast to the twenty years of calm waiting for the end, which followed the death of Jesus.

Mr. Renan, after deploring the mystery which overhangs so many of the facts of primitive Christianity, addressed himself to penetrate, as far as was possible, the veil which hides from us the circumstances of the death of Peter and Paul. It would never, he said, be wholly pierced. The likeliest view was that both perished in the great massacre of the Christians ordained by Nero. As to the fact of such a massacre there was no room for doubt, since we had it on the authority of Tacitus. It was an episode in the history of the great fire of Rome, which broke out on July 19, A.D. 64, and not only destroyed entirely three out of the 14 regiones of which the city consisted, but reduced seven more to blackened walls. Of this frightful disaster, the suspicion which Nero fell under of having caused it, and the heartlessness with which the tyrant abandoned the Christians to the rising waves of the public wrath, M. Renan gave a most graphic recital. It was but too easy for Nero to carry out his infernal idea of making the new religionists the scapegoats of his own crime. They were still worse hated than himself. The horror they felt for the temples made it very conceivable to the bigoted mob that they had at least fed, if they had not lighted the flames. Some strict Jews would not carry money because it bore Caesar's image, while others would not pass through any city gate surmounted by a statue. The song over burning Rome in the Apocalypse, written four years and a half afterward, most likely borrowed some traits from the great fire of A.D. 64. The exultation there expressed was too congenial to the pious sectaries, who were not unlikely to have seen in spirit the saints and angels applauding from on high what was regarded as a just expiation. Nero offered his gardens across the Tiber for the shows, in which the victims were to be the Christians clad in the skins of wild beasts; while others, dressed in garments saturated with oil and pitch, served as living torches to illuminate the horrid scene. M. Renan described this fête of Nero's gardens on the first of August, a day which he could only compare with that of Golgotha, of sufficiently realistic detail. The event was one of the most solemn in the history of Christianity. After remarking that the solidity of a building is in proportion to the virtue, the sacrifices, the devotion deposited on the foundation stone, he added that fanatics alone can found anything. Judaism lives on still, because of the intense frenzy of its prophets and annalists; Christianity, by means of its witnesses. Nero's orgy was the great baptism of blood which marked out Rome, now the city of martyrs, as destined to play a signal part in the history of Christianity, and to be its second Holy City. It was the taking possession of the Vatican Hill by a kind of triumphal procession unknown till then. The hateful and brainless Emperor did not see that he was founding a new order of things, and was signing for the future a charter whose provisions would be matter of claim at the end of 1800 years. M. Renan proceeded to argue that Peter and Paul were both martyred at this epoch, and not improbably in the manner attested by tradition; namely, Peter being crucified with his head downward, and Paul by beheading.—Advertiser.

PUBLIC EDUCATION IN THE NEW WEST.

The "Educational Commission for the New West" recently established at Chicago, and having under its auspices Colorado College and preparatory academies at Santa Fé, Albuquerque in New Mexico, and the Salt Lake Academy in Utah with a connected system of primary schools, is a symptom of a pressing national necessity. Gen. Eaton, United States commissioner of education, summons our Northern and Eastern people to immediate and vigorous educational measures in these Western Territories. Their local legislation is very inefficient, securing only short school terms, small pay, poor teachers, and no training schools. The Mormons in Utah and the Jesuits in New Mexico and elsewhere are piling up hinderances to any education which can be properly called American. The Mormons are thoroughly organized by secret oaths, their tithing system, priestly espionage, polygamous marriages, and the various mysteries of the endowment house, all devised to thwart Gentile influences and United States control. The little schooling there is in Utah is of a low grade, the schools essentially parochial, held in Mormon meeting-houses, and used for propagating the Mormon faith, under the control of the church officers. The bishops supplement such education on Sundays by sermons on farming, etc., one recently attended by Rev. Sheldon Jackson being on the advantages of blooded stock, the brethren and sisters being invited on the occasion to subscribe for the purchase of new stock. The only way to disrupt the Mormon system is to promote freer and better education, and so get hold of the children and the more intelligent Mormon parents who are ready to welcome such education. Salt Lake Academy, which stands at the head of all the schools in the Territory, has most auspiciously begun this work.

New Mexico will soon be knocking for admission as a State,—with, however, its one hundred thousand "greasers," or mixed Spanish and Indians, its seven thousand Pueblos, pagan fire worshippers and good Catholics, not one of whom ever learned to read under Catholic teaching for three centuries; with its large majority of mixed Spanish and Indian population, trained as slaves or peons until emancipated by the proclamation of President Lincoln. There are some thirty thousand of these "greasers" in Southern Colorado. The whole of this mongrel population are sunk in a degradation that is far behind not only American, but all modern civilizations; and yet they have been pronounced voters by the Supreme Court of the United States. It is not strange that when, eighteen years ago, the school question came before the Legislature of New Mexico, they almost unanimously voted it down. The question of establishing public schools being put to popular vote resulted in thirty-seven votes in favor and five thousand against.

In accounting for this, the Jesuit influence comes in. At first, the Catholic clergy bitterly opposed the school laws. Failing to prevent them, they try to mould them to suit themselves. Two years ago, their majority in the Legislature passed a law giving the Jesuits peculiar educational immunities and privileges. The governor vetoed it; but the Legislature passed it over his veto, the head of the Jesuits, in his official robes, sitting by the speaker's side and urging the passage of the bill. Congress, however, afterward annulled it as violating, in some particulars, the Constitution. But, with all that can be done to watch and limit this Jesuit influence, the present school system of New Mexico is mainly a farce, as judged by American ideas. The priests manage to qualify as school commissioners and get a part of the school money. The Protestant politicians try for their share, and those who manipulate the votes must at least teach school. So it happens that men who can neither read nor write produce certificates that they have kept the school. A common text-book is the Jesuit catechism in Spanish. No Catholic girls are permitted by the priests to attend school with the boys. The press of New Mexico has been officially warned against advocating public schools, and all the Protestant scandals that could be hashed out of our Eastern court records and newspapers have been studiously circulated among the ignorant Mexicans to warn them against the common school system, and to instigate their Mexican patriotism against American ideas.

When we remember that some years ago a bill to admit New Mexico as a State actually passed the Senate through the bargaining of the delegates with republican senators, and was defeated by the Democratic House on the statement of facts about New Mexico by Gen. Eaton, we should carefully watch all future movements of the New Mexican delegates and politicians bearing upon the admission of that territory as well as the rest of the Western Territories. The good citizens of those Territories, unbiassed by political scheming, would unanimously oppose their admission as States till wholesome school laws are enacted and put in healthy operation. Meanwhile, it is wise and patriotic for the people of the older States to help with substantial aid such institutions as Colorado College and Salt Lake Academy. We should, at least, be even with the Jesuits in this thing. No other body has done so much as they, either to hinder the free school system or to control education by their own schools. Their school in Denver has the majority of its pupils from Protestant families. In this and other signal instances, they are working the same educational plan which has established at Washington one of the most distinguished Jesuit schools in the country, patronized largely by the families of senators and others of the highest social standing. It is significant that not long ago a conspicuous company of Jesuit educators gathered in consultation with their official head, who resides in Washington. France and Germany have now many able Jesuits to spare. They are welcome either as sharers in our American liberty and progress or as contestants in a square fight and an open field. We respect the ability of the disciples of Loyola, we are familiar with their political history, and we know that they will bear watching.—Springfield Republican.

Poetry.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE.

The night has one thousand eyes,
And the day but one;
Yet the light of the bright world dies
With the setting sun.

The mind has one thousand eyes,
And the heart but one;
Yet the light of the whole life dies
When love is done.

ANON.

DUTY.

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
O Duty! if that name thou love,
Who art a light to guide, a rod
To check the erring and reprove;
Thou who art victory and law,
When empty terrors overawe,
From vain temptations dost set free,
And calm'st the weary strife of frail humanity.

There are who ask not if thine eye
Be on them; who in love and truth,
Where no misgiving is, rely
Upon the genial sense of youth;
Glad hearts without reproach or blot,
Who do thy work and know it not:
Oh, if through confidence misplaced
They fail, thy saving arms, dread Power, around them cast!

Stern lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
The Godhead's most benignant grace;
Nor know we anything so fair
As is the smile upon thy face:
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds,
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong,
And the most ancient heavens through thee are fresh and strong.

WORDSWORTH.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 22.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

William Keith, $3; F. Fradley, $2.20; H. L. Babcock, $1.36; Emerson Bentley, $3.20; C. W. Storey, $10; George Henshaw, $13; D. H. Clark, $2.50; Rev. E. W. Mundy, $6.40; T. W. Higginson, $24.04; Mrs. L. B. Sayles, $2; A. S. Brown, $12.20; G. W. Reipold, $3; T. A. Kinney, $6.94; William Paulson, $3; Wm. J. Ferris, $1; J. H. Clark, $3.25; A. Folsom, $1; Thomas Davis, $13.20; J. F. Barrett, $40.00; Mrs. M. M. Ballou, $13.25.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 27, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged May 20.....	$2,251.00
Prof. FELIX ADLER, New York.....	10.00
Mrs. K. FLORENCE, ".....	1.00
M. DILLENHOEFER, ".....	1.00
JOHN T. MILLS, ".....	1.00
H. W. HENNING, ".....	1.00
A. BENDER, ".....	1.00
JOHN FRANKHEIMER, ".....	1.00
LEO G. ROSEBLATT, ".....	1.00
DR. MANDLEBAUM, ".....	1.00
MARTIN L. VAN HOEN, ".....	1.00
FRANK S. WELTER, ".....	1.00
G. M. PHELPS, ".....	5.00
G. M. PHELPS, JR., ".....	2.00
DR. LUDWIG S. W. LIMPET, ".....	1.00
DR. H. RAPHAEL, Brooklyn, N. Y.....	1.00
DR. W. H. BATES, ".....	1.00
DANIEL DRAKE SMITH, Englewood, N.J.....	5.00
LYDIA MARIA CHILD, Wayland, Mass.....	20.00
Total.....	$2,280.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F.R.A.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Ninth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at the office of the Association, 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 5, 1880, at 2.30 P.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows: Business session, for election of officers, hearing and discussion of reports, etc., Thursday, May 27, 7.45 P.M., at the Parker Fraternity Hall in the Parker Memorial Building, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets.

Convention, Friday, May 28, with sessions at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M. in the Parker Memorial Hall. At the morning session, an essay will be given by Francis E. Abbot on the question, "What does Free Religion offer as the Guide of Life?" In the following addresses, the discussion will range under the general subject: "Dr. Channing, Theodore Parker, and the Step Next." In the afternoon, the subject is to be "Liberal Principles as opposed to Sectarianism in Education," to be opened with an essay by John H. Clifford, of North Andover. Prof. Felix Adler, Wm. H. Channing, Rowland Connor, Mary F. Eastman, W. R. Alger, and Robert Collyer are among the speakers expected, most of them being positively promised.

Social Festival, Friday evening, in the same place, using both upper and lower halls. There will be music, brief addresses, refreshments, and opportunity for social greetings and conversation.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

"SOCIETY THE REDEEMED FORM OF MAN."

IN THE INDEX for January 20, 1876, was published the first of a remarkable series of letters by Mr. Henry James, Senior, father of the distinguished novelist of the same name, and of Professor William James, of Harvard University, who is earning equal distinction in quite a different department of literature. These letters attracted no little attention at the time. The same views have been recently published in a new and much more elaborate form, in the shape of a handsomely printed volume of nearly five hundred pages, entitled Society the Redeemed Form of Man, from the press of Houghton, Osgood & Company.

It is entirely beyond our power at present to give an abstract of the contents of this most genuine and sincere book, or even to attempt a brief notice such as its merit demands, for the simple reason that we have not yet been able to do much more than glance hurriedly over it. But again and again has our attention been arrested by sentences that are quick and tingling with life. Here is a passage which capitally illustrates one of the salient characteristics of the book—namely, its pungency and captivating audacity of satire:—

"Professional religion, I repeat, is the devil's masterpiece for ensnaring silly, selfish men. The ugly beast has two heads: one called Ritualism, intended to devour a finer and fastidious style of men, men of sentiment and decorum, cherishing scrupulously moderate views of the difference between man and God; the other called Revivalism, with a great red mouth intended to gobble up a coarser sort of men, men for the most part of a fierce carnality, of ungovernable appetite and passion, susceptible at best only of the most selfish hopes, and the most selfish fears, towards God. I must say, we are not greatly devastated here in Boston—though occasionally vexed—by either head of the beast; on the contrary, it is amusing enough to observe how afraid the great beast himself is of being pecked to pieces on our streets by a little indigenous bantam-cock which calls itself Radicalism, and which struts, and crows, and scratches gravel in a manner so bumptious and peremptory, that I defy any ordinary barnyard chanticleer to imitate it."

This is simply delicious. Boston "Radicalism" is here hit off to the life, and so no less is "Radicalism" everywhere, as it too frequently presents itself for public inspection. In fact, shallowness, cheap smartness and chip-on-the-shoulder belligerency are everywhere marks of a mind that breaks loose from tradition, not because it has found something better, but because it is too pert, conceited and empty of seriousness to see any truth in "the past," sneers at "culture," and shows itself too ill-educated even to know the worth of education.

But it is not the keenness of its two-edged satire, nor yet the brilliancy of its coruscating style, that makes this book quite unique among the publications that now come pouring from the press. Here is a fresh, vigorous, original thinker, long experienced in modern life and thoroughly conversant with modern thought, indeed no less a "Radical" than those he satirizes, who yet burns with intense and fervent religious faith. This is something that can never be simulated. The cloven hoof of religious insincerity infallibly betrays itself in cant, but there is no cant here. The "truth of God's natural humanity" is to this unorthodox soul, not a "glittering generality," but a "blazing ubiquity,"—and that too in an age when genuine faith seems almost dying out of all accredited religion. True, Mr. James often refers to Swedenborg, and draws from that inexplicably great soul not a little of the thought he reproduces in his own pages; but he nowhere treats Swedenborg as an "authority," and declares expressly that Swedenborg was "conspicuously free from this vulgarity" of personal assumption. "Nothing," says Mr. James, "could have awakened a blush of deeper resentment on that innocent brow, if he could have foreseen the outrage, than the base spirit of sect, which in the face of his honest denunciations of it ventures to renew its unhallowed empire by clothing him with Divine authority." There is no less want of deference for Swedenborg's mere ipse dixit in Mr. James himself: Swedenborg is no master to him, and he is no slave to Swedenborg, yet his soul is all on fire with the same faith as his, and he gratefully thanks him for it. In all this there is nothing for which we have not the deepest respect and reverence. Genuineness, intensity of conviction, original intellectual or moral or spiritual vitality,—this is the one thing forever venerable and great, whether the form of thought be, as in Mr. James' case, Theism, or, as in the case of George Jacob Holyoake, Atheism. Faticism itself is infinitely preferable to ceremonial sham or mere religious conventionality. It is this strength and fervor of religious faith, glowing on every page, that makes us, in spite of deep intellectual differences, warm not a little to this ruggedly honest book. It is not one man in a million who will write thus bravely of himself to the great indifferent public:—

"I suppose, if any one had designated me previous to that event [a strange attack of illness] as an earnest seeker after truth, I should myself have seen nothing unbecoming in the appellation. But now, within two or three months of my catastrophe, I felt sure I had never caught a glimpse of truth. My present consciousness was exactly that of an utter and plenary destitution of truth. Indeed, an ugly suspicion had more than once forced itself upon me, that I had never really wished the truth, but only to ventilate my own ability in discovering it. I was getting sick to death, in fact, with a sense of my downright intellectual poverty and dishonesty. . . . Truth indeed! How should a beggar like me be expected to discover it? How should any man of woman born pretend to such ability? Truth must reveal itself if it would be known, and even then how imperfectly known at best!"

How, then, is truth to "reveal itself," if man has no power to "discover" it? Mr. James answers this question, and with the same touching and winning ingenuousness, as follows:—

"I am anxious to conciliate your heart primarily, while your head is quite a subordinate aim. I cannot tell you a single reason, unprompted by the heart, why I myself believe the truth in question [God's natural humanity], or any other truth for that matter; and, so far as my own pleasure is concerned, accordingly, I would not give a fig for your acknowledgment of it, if the acknowledgment did not betray a like cordial source. In fact, I believe it simply because I love it, or it seems adorably good to me; and, once having learned to love it, I could not do without it. It would in truth kill me, intellectually, to doubt it. . . . To my experience this is the only thing that in the long run authenticates truth to the intellect—the heart's sincere craving for it. I find that truth unloved is always at bottom truth unbelievably, however much it may be professed. In short, I am persuaded that there is no more galling bondage known to the intellect than that of truth unsanctioned and unsoftened by affection; and I don't the least wonder at Swedenborg—when describing men in a freer world than this, however—saying that they willingly plunge into the depths of hell to be rid of it."

All this is intensely Christian in principle, and our readers all understand that our own principle is diametrically opposite to it. We have pleaded publicly, for more than fourteen years, in behalf of the scientific method in religion: that is, for making the "head," freed from all perturbing bias of affection or prejudice or feeling of any sort, the recognized and supreme judge as to what is true or false. Of course, therefore, we cannot agree intellectually with Mr. James in his method as he here describes it. But we see that he is all the while unconsciously using his intellect, when he thinks he is using his heart. All through his able book, he is simply distinguishing relations among things and thoughts, which is the act of the intellect alone; he discriminates, divides, infers, argues, reasons, affirms, denies,—in short, uses his “head” continuously, like any other philosopher. He could not possibly do otherwise. The opinions he expresses have been formed by his intellect, and founded on such evidence as his intellect deems conclusive or satisfactory. The “heart” never yet succeeded in framing a sentence or a proposition, in affirming or denying anything. The real difference between thinkers such as Mr. James and thinkers who consciously adopt the scientific method lies in the nature of the evidence which they respectively accept as the basis of their conclusions. The advocates of the “heart” consider the test of truth to lie in the congruity of conclusions with their own feelings, desires, wishes, hopes, sentiments; the advocates of the “head” consider it to lie in congruity with the verified experience of the human race. The test of the one is subjective; the test of the other is objective. Christianity has always adopted the first test; science always adopts the second test. Philosophy has hitherto agreed far more with Christianity, in point of method, than with science, although it has seldom been consistent with itself; and philosophy, no less than religion, is destined to be reformed in this respect. The one great reform which, already begun, is certain to be carried out completely in all departments of human thinking, consists in the adoption of the scientific method, and in strict adherence to it as the only real means of discriminating between fancy and fact, illusion and reality, error and truth. It does not follow that all the conclusions based upon the evidence of the “heart” will be rejected, when the evidence of the “head” is substituted in its place; on the contrary, many of the beliefs dearest to the “heart” will undoubtedly prove to be indestructibly grounded on the nature of things itself, when the great reform indicated has been fully achieved. But the conscious adoption of the scientific method will furnish what has always been lacking—a criterion by which to discriminate between hallucination and actuality, between fanaticism and rational belief, between capricious and irresponsible individualism and the sober recognition of the necessity of conforming private opinion to the capitalized intellectual experience of mankind.

Curiously enough, one who takes this ground seems to be far more imbued with the “race-consciousness” for which Mr. James so eloquently pleads than he is himself; for he appears, at least, to defend the very essence of individualistic “selfhood,” when [page 60] he makes the individual “his own sole and divinely empowered arbiter” of the contents of divine revelation. This is the Protestant principle of irresponsible “private judgment,” carried out consistently to its logical ultimate in pure individualism; yet Mr. James is penetrated and surcharged with the sense of the oneness of the race, of which the very title of his book is a sufficient indication. In this latter respect we profoundly sympathize with him; and we feel entitled to receive his sympathy in return, when we plead for the universal adoption of the scientific method as the only possible mode of realizing a “race-consciousness” in matters of intellectual belief. We believe that, on the whole, the wisdom of all is greater than the wisdom of one, even though the one may be wiser than the all in some particular points; and we really see no way to reconcile the rights of the individual with the rights of the race, except by accepting universal science, with its verified results and its impregnable established method, as the concentered, clarified, and consolidated wisdom of all mankind. Outside of this position, only two positions are logically possible: one is that of Catholicism, with its irresponsible despotism of Authority, and the other is that of Individualism, with its irresponsible anarchy of License. Catholicism clearly sees the inevitable outcome of the Protestant principle, and takes no pains to conceal its high disdain for the futile, anarchical, and suicidal Individualism to which it tends. But Catholicism is afraid of science, being dimly conscious that here is a higher authority than itself, a mightier consensus than that of its own mere ecclesiasticism, by which its own swollen pretensions are destined to be finally and fatally crushed. Nor is there the slightest danger that science will, in the end, fail to include anything that belongs to the universal experience of the race. It is solely through the universalization of the scientific method, both in physical and in spiritual science, in philosophy and in religion alike, that a real and lasting intellectual race-consciousness can ever be achieved; and that is the only possible foundation of a real and lasting religious race-consciousness.

We trust that Mr. James will accept what we have here said as advanced not at all polemically, but with a sincere desire to help realize his own ideal of a universal human society thoroughly and interiorly harmonized with Universal Being.

A LETTER FROM MRS. CHENEY.

May 19, 1880.

DEAR INDEX:—

May I make my monthly article rather a gossip letter, since so many things are in my mind that I would like to speak of, and the warm weather does not incline one to labored thought on any theme?

I want to say a kindly word of good-by to the Editor, who has so long seemed the central point about whom our boldest thoughts have congregated. Nothing could be sweeter and more generous than his farewell words; and I believe we shall be doing him the honor he most craves, if we rally anew about the paper he established, under whatever change of name and leadership, so long as it carries on the great work for freedom and religion. And who can doubt that it will do so nobly and beautifully under the guidance of Mr. Potter, whose strength and power are only equalled by his depth of feeling and reverence?

It is hard to make such changes, and yet they are in the very constitution of our lives. We must pass on from one phase of thought and action to another. We must see what we have carefully reared thrown down to be only stepping-stones for others to climb on. Nothing is more pathetic in the history of all reforms than the setting aside of those who have broken the ground and made success possible to those by whose hands the final victory is achieved. The freeman thanks God for his emancipation through Abraham Lincoln, and knows little of the Lovejoys who were martyred and the Garrisons who labored, to make it possible for Lincoln to give the final blow that overthrew slavery. I cannot think there is any failure in THE INDEX, which seems to me now passing out of its grub state to unfold new wings and have a larger and richer life. Mr. Abbot's thought also will not be lost; but he will, I trust, have greater quiet and leisure to employ that admirable method of thought and clear statement in which no one excels him, in work more full and lasting than the columns of a newspaper have given him opportunity for.

I want to call the attention of our readers to two books lately published. One is Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell's Moral Education in Relation to Sex. It is a clear, admirable statement of the most important physiological truths, made with such perfect dignity, simplicity, and purity, that no mother need hesitate to place it in the hands of her son or daughter as one of the guides of life. On physiological grounds alone, and with the authority of medical education and experience, she emphasizes the great moral laws of chastity, and shows them to be not only consistent with, but essential to, the highest physical and intellectual as well as moral development of the human being. Her language is so calm and unimpassioned that no painful excitement is produced, and her style is so clear and her thoughts so important that the book holds the attention firmly and there is no temptation to skip. She is doing, by this work, a most important service, which no one but a highly educated woman physician could do.

How unlike is the other book,—Miss Peabody's Reminiscences of Dr. Channing! And yet the effect on the mind is similar; for it takes you into such an atmosphere of moral purity, and yet rich and varied intellectual life, as calms all the passions and makes one feel the sweetness of spiritual life filling the active duty of the reformer.

What a picture of the life of that period is given! How earnest and rich those conversations in the study! What an event to hear Father Taylor preach three sermons in one day and not exhaust his theme, to discuss with Channing Emerson's address to the divinity students! Mr. James thinks life in Boston was dull and stupid then, does he? His taste is like that of Couture's valet, who refused choice champagne because it was too insipid for his taste. Dr. Channing's relation to that life was most wonderfully beneficial. It seems as if the very physical infirmity which kept him so much a recluse enabled him to look with unprejudiced calmness on the glow and rush of life about him, and to maintain that perfect spirit and method of truth, which remains the one thing not to be changed, however opinions and beliefs may vary. Beside all the spiritual and intellectual value of the work, Miss Peabody has given us little unconscious touches of biography and autobiography which bring us into a more intimate relation with Dr. Channing's circle than more labored discourses.

These anniversary memorials are doing good service. They relate us anew to the past and bind us all together in greater unity. E. D. C.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at East Dennis, Mass., Sunday, June 6.

CHUNG HOW, the Chinese rebel, has been sentenced to be beheaded.

MR. ALBERT BIERSTADT, the artist, is a guest of the Marquis of Lorne at Rideau Hall.

A ROME telegram to the Standard says, “Many Jesuits will go to America when the decrees against them are enforced.”

PROF. ADLER has been chosen by the Independent Republicans of New York as a delegate to the Chicago Convention.

MR. TENNYSON has, at the request of the Glasgow University Club, allowed himself to be nominated for the Lord Rectorship of the University.

SHEPHERD COWLEY does not like being in prison. His lawyer has petitioned the courts for a new trial, in the hope that he may escape in that way.

MRS. BLOOMER, the projector of the famous bloomer costume, has just celebrated her fortieth wedding anniversary, at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

SENATOR AND MRS. BRUCE are quoted as expressing their regret that people should come and pay them “duty calls” when their hearts were left behind.

MR. JOHN BARTLETT, the compiler of Familiar Quotations, has just sent to the press an Index to Shakespeare, to be published by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co.

A. BRONSON ALCOTT read a paper last week before the New England Historic-Genesalogical Society, at a special meeting. It was entitled “The Farmer's Boy,” and largely autobiographical.

MR. FISH is mentioned as the “dark horse” at the approaching Convention,—“horse-mackerel,” it has been suggested. It is very certain that more scaly candidates have been elected.

MR. L. K. WASHBURN spoke at Cosmian Hall, Florence, Mass., to good audiences, morning and evening, Sunday, May 16. Mr. N. A. Haskell took Mr. Washburn's place at Lynn and Revere.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL lectured at Booth's Theatre, New York, Sunday evening, the 9th inst., to a crowded house, and the great delight of those who enjoy his way of handling the sacred things of the Orthodox Temple.

A SWEDEN is making the round of Europe in a car drawn by three Irish dogs; and he hopes to complete his tour by Berlin, Paris, Vienna, Italy, and England, in six months. This exceptional tourist is conversant with many tongues. This is certainly a dogged way of travelling.

IT IS RUMORED the Parker Memorial Society would like to have the Rev. Mr. Chadwick move to Boston. But, as a long and very successful ministry at Brooklyn has bound him very strongly to that city, it is probable that these attractions will hold him for some time longer at least.

F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT, the free-thinker lecturer of San Francisco, is on a visit to his friends and a lecture-trip East, which will also be extended somewhat to the West. An effort was made in New York to secure a speech from him at the Free Religious meeting in Boston this week, but without success, owing to his crowded engagements.

IT IS SAID that there is a strong disposition to invite the Rev. Robert Collyer to the Unitarian pulpit just vacated by the Rev. Clay MacCauley in Washington. Mr. Collyer came to the Unitarians from Methodism, and still retains largely the characteristics of that denomination. Inasmuch as he took charge of his present church in New York but a few months since, this would seem a little like going on the circuit again.

THE BRONZE bust of Thomas Moore, by D. B. Sheahan, now at the Metropolitan Museum, will be placed in position near the Fifth Avenue entrance to the Central Park, on Friday, the 28th,—the one hundredth and first anniversary of the birth of the poet,—when it will be unveiled with appropriate ceremonies. The bust will be a gift to the city from the Moore Memorial Association, which held a Moore centennial celebration last year.

OF M. RENAN, the London Times says: “M. Renan is, in fact, the great literary exponent of what we have called the new theology. A scholar himself, he concentrates and clarifies the researches of hosts of scholars whose gifts of speech and exposition are less brilliant than his own. But to call him the mere popularizer of the labors of others would be to do him a signal injustice. In the vast field of critical and historical research, some division of labor is commonly necessary; for the microscopical faculties of Dryasdust are not commonly found in conjunction with the gift of lucid exposition or the imaginative insight necessary to a large and just historical presentation. But M. Renan has the rare and happy gift of combining the minute research of the student with the comprehensive grasp of the historian. We feel in scanning it that his picture is no mere compilation of other men's materials, but the product of his own independent inquiries, suffused with the atmosphere of his own mind and sympathies. This is what gives it its freshness and vitality, quite independently of its special details or its general scheme of coloring and arrangement.”

FOREIGN.

PROF. JOHN FISKE has just begun a new course of lectures at the London Institution upon American political ideas.

THE NEW ROMAN CATHOLIC cathedral at South Kensington, London, for which $1,000,000 has already been raised, will rank in size next after St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey. The style selected is a florid Gothic.

LA JUSTICE, commenting upon the remarks of the reverend gentleman of San Francisco who lately prayed for the spread of phylloxera and the destruction of the vines, insinuates that he probably prefers pale ale and porter to the ruddier beverage.

A REPORT, which is not yet confirmed, has reached Calcutta, that King Thebaw of Burmah has died of small-pox. It is also stated that barbarous massacres had been perpetrated at Mandalay by the advice of the astrologers, to appease the evil spirits who were causing the epidemic.

FOR THE FIRST time since the reign of Henry VIII. a military mass is now celebrated in the Tower, for the benefit of the Roman Catholic officers and men of the Guards stationed there. This result has been mainly brought about by the Rev. Father Bowden, who was formerly an officer in the Household Brigade.

THE PRINCESS ROYAL of England and Imperial Princess of Germany has been enrolled a member of the Institute of Painters in Water Color, and among the works to be exhibited in the forthcoming summer show in London will be found her "Roma," a drawing made in the course of a recent visit to the City of the Seven Hills. The Princesses of the English royal family have all inherited a love of art.

IN ALESSANDRIA, two priests were lately taking a walk in the streets, when one of them, aged eighty years, was wounded in the face by a bullet discharged at him by a cripple. The would-be assassin was immediately arrested, and asked what was his motive for such a crime. He replied, "I have suffered pain for seven years, and I wished to kill a priest." On the person of this cripple, who was lame, and had a mutilated arm, were found a long knife and a considerable sum of money. It is not stated why he believed the slaughter of a priest would be efficacious in restoring a broken limb.

"THE COMMUNION will be administered next Thursday, at twelve o'clock, weather permitting." This is how the Rev. Mr. Childers, of Holy Trinity, Nice, announces his intention to commemorate the life and death of his master, Jesus of Nazareth. How devoted must be the members of this Anglo-Savoyard Church, and how highly they must value their hats and bonnets, which they will not, on any account, expose to even the prospective peril of a passing shower! This is a fair sample of Evangelicalism, and it is not to be wondered at that both sceptics and "true believers" alike hold Low Churchmen of the Childers' type in the utmost contempt. Fancy a Roman Catholic priest postponing a mass at the sight of a few threatening clouds!—Secular Review.

THE NATIONAL Convention of Bolivia has ordered the sale by public auction of the property of the convents and churches of the Republic. The decree is dated 21st February, and is as follows: "The National Convention of Bolivia has ordered the sale by public auction of the property of all the convents and monasteries of the Republic, except the eighth part, which is destined for the support of the religious. The sale is likewise ordered of the treasures of the churches, including the ornaments of the images, the sacred vessels being alone excepted. The product of the sale shall be applied to defraying the expenses of the war, such as the purchase of ships, the levying of troops, etc. The priests who in the pulpit or in any other place, and laymen who in the press or in public meeting, oppose the execution of this law, either pacifically or by promoting public disturbances, shall be tried as traitors to the country."

ACCORDING to the Society for the Propagation of the Jewish Faith, the head-quarters of which are at Berlin, there are at the present moment scattered over the face of the earth from six to seven millions of Jews; that is to say, the same number of Israelites, or nearly so, as it is alleged existed in the time of King David. Of these, 5,000,000 live in Europe, 200,000 in Asia, 800,000 in Africa, and a million or more in America. In Europe, Russia reckons the highest number of Jews, 2,621,000 being established in that country. Second on the list comes Austria-Hungary, which possesses 1,375,000 Israelites, of which 575,000 reside in Galicia. Germany gives hospitality to 512,000 Jews, Holland to 70,000, England to 50,000, France to 49,000, Italy to 35,000. Spain and Portugal together have but from three to four thousand Jews in their territory, Sweden 1,800, and Norway only 25 Israelites in the whole kingdom. In Berlin alone, there are 45,000 Jews, nearly as many as in the whole of France. There are 25,000 Jews in Palestine, the majority being at Jerusalem, where the Israelite population is estimated at 13,500, of which 7,000 are Mussulmans.

THE Dispatch complains that the advanced Radicals have not been sufficiently recognized in the composition of the new ministry. It says: "It is impossible to feel any immense enthusiasm for the present ministry. Even if we only take the bare strength of the Radical party in the House, they are entitled to at least three or four seats in the Cabinet. If we take their strength in the country, they might well claim to be the better half of the Liberal voters; and, if we consider their energy and their ability, we do not think that any will be found to question that in these respects, too, they by no means fall short of the Whigs. And yet what do we see? Mr. Chamberlain is our solitary representative; Mr. Fawcett, Sir Charles Dilke, and Mr. Mundella have subordinate offices, and that is all. The army which has stormed the fortress so valiantly, and won it so well, is ordered to retire; the chiefs divide the spoils and garrison the place; and we, with unspeakable difficulty, and only after the voice of the nation has been unmistakably expressed in every class of organ, succeed in obtaining that a solitary sentry shall be posted to watch over our interests. The new ministry will be judged by its deeds, and not by the names of those who compose it; but the manner in which it has been formed is not a happy augury for its future success."

AT THE AUCTION MART, Messrs. Debenham, Tewson & Co. have offered for sale the advowsons and perpetual right of presentation to two valuable church livings, one situated in the county of Essex and the other in Suffolk, both being at present held by one clergyman—the Rev. Frederick Elwes, seventy-four years of age—who is both rector and vicar of the parish of Gestingthorpe, in Essex, and also rector of Wiscoe, in Suffolk. The particulars stated that the net income of the Essex rectory and vicarage was £888. The rectory was stated to be a comfortable residence, approached by a carriage drive, with stable, coach-house, and other outbuildings, together with a good garden and grass paddock and glebe land, comprising an area of one hundred and thirty-one acres. It was added that there were also an excellent farmhouse with numerous buildings, and a smaller house and buildings. The population of the parish was stated to be seven hundred and seventy-one persons. The net annual value of the Suffolk rectory was said to be £227. There were a rectory-house, with gardens attached, and a coach-house and stables, together with fifteen acres of glebe land, and the population of the parish was stated to be one hundred and thirty-five persons. The advowson of the Essex rectory was first offered, the auctioneer observing that it must be worth at least £10,000 and that as the population of the parish was small the duties could not be heavy. The advowson was withdrawn at £5,000. The Suffolk rectory was next offered, when £600 was the first bid. The highest sum offered was £940, at which price the advowson was withdrawn.—The News of the World.

SIGNS ARE not wanting that the Turk is fully aware of the significance of the change of government in this country. We have every reason to indulge the hope that neither Montenegro nor Greece will much longer be deceived nor Europe trifled with by the Porte. The true character of the Ottoman, and the value of his promises of amendment, may be gathered from the following extract from a letter of a correspondent of the Times residing in Central Turkey: "The oft-repeated declaration that the testimony of Christians is now admitted in Turkish courts is untrue. Such declarations are made in several treaties, and are pointed at with considerable pride by the friends of the Turks as an evidence of the readiness of Moslems to change their methods in the interest of progress and civilization. The fact is that, so far as the interior of the country is concerned, such declarations remain a dead letter, the only effect of which is to irritate the Moslems and disappoint the Christians." Of all the religious systems in the world, Mohammedanism—as exemplified by the race of Osman—is the most fatal to human advancement. For some centuries the Saracens obtained from their creed a warlike stimulus, which made them conquerors and—thanks to the Jews—progressionists. The Turk, however, has from the first wrapped himself up in his religion, which he has converted into a barrier against the rest of humanity. We ought not, perhaps, to judge of the Mohammedan imposture by the Turk, any more than we should go to Spanish history for an ideal Christianity. It is certain, however, that the creed of Islam has but intensified the vices inherent in the Ottoman character, as Catholicism encouraged the sanguinary disposition of the Spaniards. The true solution of the Turkish difficulty is to foster the growth of new nationalities in the East.—Secular Review.

THE NORTH AMERICAN.

The June number of the North American Review contains "Popular Fallacies about Russia," by E. W. Stoughton, ex-Minister to Russia; "Divorces in New England," by Dr. Nathan Allen; "McClellan's Last Service to the Republic," by George Ticknor Curtis; "Has the Southern Pulpit failed?" by Rev. Dr. F. A. Shoup; "Caste at West Point," by P. S. Michie, Professor of Philosophy at West Point; and "Some Interesting Publications," by M. W. Hazeltine. This number closes the one hundred and thirtieth volume and sixty-fifth year of the Review. During the last few years, this magazine has made a most remarkable advance in popular favor. Many of its numbers have passed through several editions, and its permanent circulation has increased more than sixfold. The New York Sun says of it: "It is full of masterly disquisitions on the great questions that occupy the minds of the world." The Brooklyn Times: "It is the cream of the nation's thought." The Albany Journal: "It is the representative of the best American thought and culture." The Hartford Courant: "It is interesting from cover to cover." The Boston Journal: "It has not a page which an intelligent reader can afford to skip." The St. Louis Christian Observer: "It is a rich feast of intellectual enjoyment." The Troy Times: "It is endowed with unprecedented elements of popularity." The Cincinnati Times: "No other magazine has such a faculty for getting hold of live, fresh, interesting contributions." The London (England) Academy: "It seems to have no difficulty in keeping its position at the head of the periodical literature of the United States."

Communications.

CHRISTIANITY VS. MATERIALISM.

It has been my lot recently to witness the horrid devastation caused by the most furious cyclone ever known in South-west Missouri. Language cannot describe the revolting destruction of life and property wrought by the vengeful storm-king on the evening of the 18th of April. The demon of the clouds was heedless alike of the innocence of childhood and the helplessness of age. I have never seen the inexorable cruelty of nature more painfully revealed than in this late calamity. Viewed from a scientific standpoint, it seems to me that all the beauties of earth and sky could not atone for this one ruthless freak of nature.

I have been much interested in observing how the victims of this misfortune bore their losses and what strength they derived from their respective ideas of the government of nature. Nearly all of the persons with whom I have talked took a decidedly Orthodox view of the question. They believe that God rules the universe, and in some way inscrutable to human eyes does everything for some good end. The purpose of such a calamity as the late cyclone they do not claim to understand, but they never think of questioning the wisdom of that Power that is hidden behind the storm-cloud.

This view of the subject seems very absurd to materialists, but there is a moral beauty and strength in it that commands our respect. Materialists would smile at the childish faith that could accept such a stroke as the loss of friends in this horrid way as the work of a merciful God; but, placed in the same situation themselves, what greater comfort could they derive from their own views of nature? To the Orthodox believers, above the wreck of the cyclone there is an invisible mercy and sympathy. Behind the cruel aspects of nature there is a soul of love, and where reason and human strength break down faith comes to succor. The materialist looks up from this scene of death and woe to a heartless machinery of forces that knows not an emotion of pity or love. The shrieks of fond mothers who find their darling babes crushed to death under the debris of their shattered homes touch no chord of sympathy in the pitiless heavens. The ruin that marks the path of the cyclone suggests to the materialist only the thoughtless, purposeless, soulless power in nature that knows no difference between the anguish of a mother's heart and the atoms of the "senseless rock." To discover the inherent moral weakness of materialism one need only apply its teachings to such a crisis in life as many persons in this locality have recently passed through.

When materialism can go into such a scene of ruin and woe as the town of Marshfield, Mo., presented just after the storm of which I am speaking, and give strength and consolation to the stricken people as the Christian faith did, then I will obligate myself to preach its doctrine the remainder of my life.

I have never opposed materialism as being false in philosophy, for at times it seems to me the only tenable theory of the universe; but the longer I live, the more deep becomes the conviction that it is a miserable belief for the average man or woman "to live by." No one can admire more sincerely than I do those heroic souls that view life from the stand-point of materialism, and yet have an ardent enthusiasm for the demands of duty and the service of love and righteousness; but the ordinary man is too weak a creature to get nourishment from this system of philosophy. An ostrich may seem to relish rusty bits of iron, but that is no evidence that we should go to the blacksmith shop to get food for our common domestic fowls.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, MO., May 12, 1880.

[If Materialism is true, it will prevail, despite all protests of the sentiments, in the long run. Do not let us faintly surrender this question of truth; that is throwing away everything. For one, we deny the truth of Materialism, and will risk all on that issue alone. The question is one that the intellect, not the heart, must settle; and the heart is storing up remediless pain for itself, if it insists on attempting to decide an issue of truth by a wilful and unreasoning assumption.—ED.]

A MISUSE OF MONEY.

We are informed that the English Palestine Exploration Society has determined to spend from one to two thousand pounds a year in prosecuting its researches in the Holy Land. Is there to be no end of this sort of exploration? Cui bono? The Greek, Latin, and Hebrew past have all three been squeezed dry. There is not a drop of moisture remaining in either, which has not been taken up into the general circulation. If the English Palestine Exploration Society would expend five or ten thousand dollars a year in guano and phosphates and tree-culture to restore Palestine to the category of fertile countries, it would be doing a good thing. But the world has heard enough of Palestine and its ancient worthies. They have hitherto had too much of a monopoly of the world's regard. A good many of its supposed historic characters have been demonstrated by the remorseless critical spirit of late years to be mere myths, names, or eponymous fictions. For instance, what says Bishop Colenso of Moses? That the name of Moses should be regarded as merely that of the imaginary leader of the people out of Egypt, a personage quite as shadowy and unhistorical as Aeneas in the history of Rome or England's King Arthur. So much for Moses.

Palestine is not a holy land, but a blasted land. What is its historic and mythic past compared with the cosmic past to which the geologist and astronomer introduce us? It is a misuse of mind, time, and money, to rake over the dust-heaps of Palestine longer or to expend any more critical acumen in explaining the Old and New Testament. The Tübingen and Dutch schools of Biblical exponents have exhausted that field. There is not a straw left in it for the gleaner. If one wants to know about human nature, about the contents of the human heart and head, he will take up, not the Bible, but the works of some great anthropologist like Spencer or Mill. In like manner, he will go to Humboldt's Cosmos for physical knowledge and the origin of things rather than to Genesis.

The first book of Ovid's Metamorphoses contains a much more poetic and coherent mythical account of the so-called creation and the so-called flood than the Mosaic books. It is a shame that the myths of the Bible are still taught to children in Sunday-schools. But even the childish mind is becoming too acute in many instances to harbor such rubbish. Colorado is a more interesting country than the so-called Holy Land, and will better repay the trouble of a journey. A virgin soil, where settlers can build up communities de novo on a rational basis in the light of current knowledge and current free principles, is the true holy land, and not a battle-scarred, blasted territory, covered with the dust and wrecks of priestly and kingly civilizations that perished long ago.

At last, the spell of Palestine is broken. No country or race can claim as its peculiar property and discovery the ethical principle or moral sense. This principle now dominates civilization, as it never did before. It is the sovereign principle of human nature. Matthew Arnold states the case of Palestine and its ancient men and things in his poem entitled Obermann Once More:—

While we believed, on earth he went
And open stood his grave.
Men called from chamber, church, and tent,
And Christ was there to save.
Now he is dead. Far hence he lies
In the lone Syrian town,
And on his grave with shining eyes
The Syrian stars look down.
Ah, from that sacred silent land,
Of sun and arid stone,
And crumbling wall and sultry sand,
Comes now one word alone.
From David's lips this word did roll,
'Tis true and living yet:
No man can save his brother's soul,
Nor pay his brother's debt.

B. W. BALL.

ROUSSEAU'S "CONTRAT SOCIAL."

Karl Rosenkranz, in his Neue Studien, speaks of this little work as having founded the democratic radicalism of modern Europe. From his article on Rousseau, I translate and condense the following statements. Rousseau examined first the nature and origin of the state, which according to him arises through a contract by virtue of which every member of the community surrenders his individual freedom to the universal will unconditionally and unreservedly. The state is regarded, either as a quiet, passive whole, or as an active individual sovereign opposed to other communities. The individual sustains to the state a twofold relation, that of subject and that of citizen: all the individuals, united by the state-contract, constitute the people.

In his idea of sovereignty and legislation, Rousseau proceeded from the presupposition of the abstract individual who enters independently into a contract. He ignored the fact that even among savages the individual, as the member of a family, is born into a primitive, naturally moral community.

Sovereignty, as the exercise of the abstract universal will, is inalienable. So, too, it is indivisible. Rousseau rejected as chimerical the division of power, taught by Montesquieu. The laws, as the expression of the universal will, ought to be the will of all. In so far as this cannot in fact be attained, as Locke had proven, the will of the majority which is the nearest approach to it must decide.

Rousseau, in his conception of the will, never rose to the comprehension of its concrete unity. His universal will was formed by adding together individual wills. Yet he acknowledged that, with the founding of states, men appear who influence the masses through the nimbus of divine authority, like Moses, Lykurgus, etc.

He made a distinction between the inalienable rights of man and the definite rights conferred upon a citizen by the definite laws of a particular state. He considered it, for instance, an inalienable right of man to withdraw at his pleasure from one social contract and enter another.

He attacked the representative form of government, because power can be transferred, but not will. He justly concluded that only small states could exist without representation, and wished them so small that the citizens might have a personal acquaintance with one another, as in Geneva, Athens and Sparta. He advised a confederation of these little states for mutual protection. Monarchy he rejected wholly. Democracy appeared to him the best, but on account of many circumstances the most difficult, form of government. He therefore recommended aristocracy.

He next examined the nature of government. It seemed to him best that the law-giving power should be at the same time the ruling power, but on account of external difficulties he thought it judicious that the execution of the laws should be intrusted to particular officers, who might act as mediators between the state (i.e., the will of the totality of individuals), and the people (i.e., the individuals united by the state-contract). To compel these officers to do their duty, their conduct should be criticised at free popular assemblies, held periodically; an arrangement that destroys all magisterial authority, as the history of Terrorism at the time of the French Revolution proved.

Rousseau finally regarded the means for establishing the state on a firm basis. Equality he thought would secure freedom, and the laws as far as possible should distribute power and riches equally. The more homogeneous the condition of the individual particles of the state, the easier and firmer the government, whose action might be disturbed by too great inequality and complication of interests.

Modern States have an especial difficulty to overcome. With us state and church are separate: the individual as a citizen often lives in a wholly different order of things from that in which he believes, as the member of a religious society. Rousseau wished to rectify this by a state religion, containing only the belief in one God, in a future life with reward and punishment, in the holiness of the state and the duty of tolerance; for the private convictions of individuals in religious matters ought to be left free. Whoever could not accept this state religion must leave the state: whoever opposed it actively should be punished with death. Rousseau agreed in this point with his antipode, Hobbes. He thought religion the best means of strengthening the state, because it penetrates the mind of man; but he was himself intolerant in setting up religious dogmas as political articles of faith.

These are some of the principal statements of his little work, written in an arbitrary, laconic style, without a knowledge of which the history of the French Revolution cannot be understood. The leaders of that movement made it their beacon of legislation, drew from it their terminology, commented upon and discussed its points on the tribune, and sealed it with their blood on the guillotine. Its title, Contrat Social, is characteristic; for it shows the identification of the conception of civil society with that of the state. Rousseau comprehended the state, not as a moral organism, but as a mechanism, in which the individual is a political atom. The state according to him is a society, founded through the free determination of independent persons. I can enter or withdraw from a society as I please. Neither unity of race, or of custom, or of history, neither moral participation nor patriotic feeling, binds me, but only the accord of my individual will. Rousseau is always thinking of securing to the individual his independence, his sovereignty, his unlimited right of suffrage, and jealousy upon this point swallows with him all other interests.

ELLEN M. MITCHELL.

St. Louis, May, 1880.

FREEDOM AND NECESSITY.

The two theories, one that man is a free agent, the other that he is subject to necessity, instead of conflicting, harmonize with each other; or, instead of one or the other being alone true, both are true; or, again, each is a half-truth, one being the complement of the other, and together form a complete truth.

Freedom implies not, on the one hand, that the will operates independently of conditions, nor, on the other, that man can do what he wills to do; for between willing and doing there is often an impassable distance; but that man can will to do one thing or some other, according as, under the circumstances, the one or some other seems the most desirable. Necessity, on the other hand, apparently implies that man must do as he does; whether he will or not. It really implies, however, not that man must do things against his will, but that he must will to do that which, for the time being, he is most powerfully moved to do.

Freedom, as related to necessity, can be stated in the following terms: The direction which a man's will takes is determined by necessity; that is, he must will to do that which, for the time being, he is most powerfully moved to do; and yet, as he cannot be compelled to do anything against his will, he is a free agent.

A man can be compelled to do what it is now against his will to do, but before he does it he must will to do it. We will to do under some circumstances what we would not under other circumstances; we will to do something disagreeable to avoid doing something more disagreeable, or to escape the consequences which would result from not doing it; but we never do anything against our will; that is impossible.

Now, as man cannot be compelled to do anything against his will, and is, therefore, a free agent, he is responsible for and cannot escape the consequences of his actions, be they good or evil, right or wrong, wise or foolish,—responsible, justly responsible, notwithstanding he of necessity wills to do that which, for the time being, he is most powerfully moved to do, or which, in other words, exercises the greatest compulsion; for without responsibility there could be no progress, as man's lower impulses, attractions, desires, instead of ultimately yielding to the higher, would always continue to exercise the stronger compulsion.

Within a limited sphere, man is free—free to will. Within a more limited sphere he is free, not simply to will, but to do,—nothing can prevent him, within the limit of his power, from doing as he pleases. Nothing can prevent man, within the limit of his power, from doing as he pleases, because he cannot do otherwise than as he pleases.

Man, then, is free, yet subject to necessity: free, because, within the limit of his power, nothing can prevent him from doing as he pleases; subject to necessity, even within the limit of his power, because he cannot do otherwise than as he pleases. Hence necessity does not invalidate freedom, freedom being as consistent with necessity as the finite is with the Infinite, which, although there is nowhere where it is not, not only admits of the finite, but is its cause and preserver. E. B. B.

JESTINGS.

A FLORAL SWELL.—The dandelion.

THE FASTEST TRAIN out.—The train of thought.

LEMON-ADE is better than spiritual aid as a beverage.

BISHOPS play croquet because they are used to the lawn.

"QUITE A COLD SNAP," as the fox remarked when the trap took him in.

A St. LOUIS rich man drew up a will which was so pathetically worded that it moved all his relatives to tears. It left all his property to an orphan asylum.—Boston Post.

"I WOULD hate to be in your shoes," said a woman of the east side, as she was quarrelling with a neighbor. "You couldn't get in them," sarcastically remarked the neighbor.

"HERE'S A letter," said Pat Maloney, yesterday, "from me gurrl, and would ye please be readin' it to me wid yer ize shut, that ye can't be a-larnin' my secrets."—Oil City Derrick.

A MOTHER admonishing her son told him that he should never defer till to-morrow what he could do to-day. "Then, mother, let's eat the rest of the plum pudding to-night," replied the urchin.

THE KING of Sweden is a poet, and yet his subjects don't shoot at him half as often as do the subjects of the prosy Czar. There is no accounting for the freaks of humanity.—Turner's Falls Reporter.

"SAVE ME FROM MY FRIENDS."—Artist: "Oh, so you think the background's beastly, do you? Perhaps the cattle are beastly too, though I flatter myself."—Friendly Critic: "Oh, no, my dear fellow! That's just what they are not!"

A BARGAIN.—(Scene a country inn.) Tourist: "Confound it, woman! There's a chick in this egg!" Landlady: "Well, sir, you are a lucky one! In a few weeks I could have had half a crown for that fowl, and 'ere you get it for twopence!" [And still he was not satisfied!]—Funny Folks.

ARISTOCRATIC OLD GENTLEMAN: "You do not mean to tell me, waiter, that this establishment doesn't furnish its guests with toothpicks?" Waiter (in a reproachful and melancholy tone): "Well, you see, sir, we used to keep 'em; but, sir, the gents almost invariably took 'em away with 'em, sir."

THAT WAS IT.—"There may be such a thing as love at first sight," remarked an unsophisticated girl, "but I don't believe in it. There's Fred—I saw him a hundred times before I loved him. In fact, I shouldn't have fallen in love when I did, if his father hadn't given him that nice little farm."

A WORTHY couple in a Massachusetts town had lost their only daughter and were deeply depressed. As they sat one evening in the drawing-room, heaving sighs at intervals, the wife remarked: "Well, George, there is one consolation. Situated as we are, we could never have gotten Jane into Boston society."

A YOUNG pastor who has recently had a son born to him notifies a brother pastor as follows: "Unto us a child is born; unto us a son is given.—Isa. ix., 6." It was written on a postal card. The receiver showed the message to a sister in his church. "Ah, yes," said the woman, after reading it, "it weighed nine pounds, six ounces."

MR. SIMPKINS often declares that he never drinks anything stronger than claret. Last night he came home at midnight, and, putting his lips to his wife's ear, he whispered mysteriously: "Hush, my dear, don't be alarmed, but there are burglars about. They have already stolen our keyhole. I had to get in by the cellar window!"—Boston Courier.

CHURCH-GOING.—It was a new girl who was a stranger in the town. The young lady of the house was much put out by her wanting to go to church Sunday morning when she wanted her aid in dressing. "I don't see what you are so anxious to go to church every Sunday for," she petulantly observed last Sabbath: "you don't know any fellow in Danbury."

A PIOUS MAN found a roll of bank-notes, and he had a terrible struggle with himself whether he should quietly pocket the prize or advertise for the owner. Just as his conscience was on the point of coming out second best, he discovered that the money was all counterfeit, when he concluded that honesty was the best policy, and handed the money over to a police superintendent.

JOHNNY wanted to go to the circus, and his father said: "Johnny, I'd rather you'd go to school and study, and maybe you'll be president some day." Said Johnny: "Father, there's about one million boys in the United States, isn't there?" "Yes." "And every one of them stands a chance of being president?" "Yes." "Well, dad, I'll sell out my chance for a circus ticket."—Oil City Derrick.

TRAVELLER: "Say, boy, which of these roads goes to Milton?" Stuttering Boy: "B-b-both on 'em goes thar!" Traveller: "Well, which is the quickest way?" Boy: "B-b-bout alike: b-b-both on 'em gets there 'b-b-bout the same time of day." Traveller: "How far is it?" Boy: "'Bout four m-m-miles." Traveller: "Which way is the best road?" Boy: "'T-t-they ain't nary one the b-best. If you take the right road and go about a mile, you will wish you was back; and if you turn back and take the left-hand one, by the time you have gone half a m-m-mile you'll wish you had kept on the other road." Traveller: "G'lang!"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 13 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM R. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
 Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Carlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,

Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike
 Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.
 The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.
 Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.
 The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,
SENT BY MAIL

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays (published for the Society for Ethical Culture).....	1.50
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets. Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-hill. Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXXVI. With the shorter Prophecies allied to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Bible Reading for School Teachers.....	.35
Master Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Liberalism and Politics.....	1.50
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic. Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C.A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W.B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E.D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Friends of Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (Dr. E.H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays, 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces. A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.80
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.60
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different "Forms of Flowers".....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habits of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Orchids.....	1.75
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.....	3.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.60
Felix Holt, the Radical. Illustrated.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.60
Romola. Illustrated.....	1.50
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E.W.) Essays. First Series. Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
My Day and Other Papers.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph.D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrines of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O.B.). Religion of Humanity. Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creed and Conduct.....	1.00
Cradle of the Christ.....	1.75
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Life of Gerrit Smith. 40 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Sermons. New Series. 75 numbers, each.....	.10
Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.00
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.50
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.75
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
German and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W.R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W.R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wanderholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern Frenchmen. Five Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine Illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Woman's Wrongs.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Sketches and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H.H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.50
Verses. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers.....	.35
Bits of Talk.....	1.25
Folk.....	1.00
Bits of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T.W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	2.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUMES (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
1. Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
Critiques and Addresses.....	1.50
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiography, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mistake of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection and Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Acoustic Optics.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Prof. S. Amos.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marry.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
XIII. The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eug. Lomb.....	2.00
XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesozoa. By Mons. Van Beneden.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By P. Schützenberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Reinhold.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analytical Introductions by J. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	8.00
KNAPPER (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to the Nineteenth Century. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings. Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	4.00
LESSING'S (G.E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G.H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. I. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I and II. Per vol.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Mind.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology; its Object, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H.W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J.R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Windows.....	2.00
A Fable for Critics.....	.75
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fireside Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Prehistoric Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversation of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 3 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—Both in One vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Modern Ages. An Exposition of Structural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	2.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.50
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay in some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs of the Aryan Race. Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	3.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On the Origin of Language. Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 3, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Political Society.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.25
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truett Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hegged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.30
Poetic Studies.....	1.00
The Story of Ayle.....	1.50
Truett's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Futility of World-Studies under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena. A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Psychology of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	8.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress. 4 vols.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2.00
STRAUSS (D.F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H.A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H.D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Frictions of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Slings and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.50
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.00
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E.P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....	2.00
Child Life.....	.25

ADDRESSES

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

O. B. BROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Army.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,
THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton, 75 cts.; ten, 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter, 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuennen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 263 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 234 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsey Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, 27th YEAR.

A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address CHARLES DEB. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest Inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 545.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND} {CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THIS KEEN JOKE is from the Independent: "One Dr. Pierson was appointed to travel and 'preach the distinctive doctrines' of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Imagine his horror to find that the Cumberland Presbyterian's types put punch for 'preach.' Perhaps it was as well."

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican of May 30 reports that "the Pennsylvania railroad company has determined to run almost as many trains on Sunday as on any other day. At a recent meeting of the directors, the question was put to vote, and the Sabbatarian directors were in a minority. Hitherto only about eight passenger trains have been run on the Sabbath, but the traffic is so large that more accommodations are needed. It is understood that the Central of New Jersey will follow the example of the Pennsylvania road."

REV. W. G. ELIOT, D.D., of St. Louis, said at the Unitarian Festival, May 27, that, "although now especially engaged in the work of education, he thanked God that he had not severed his connection with the Christian ministry,—a profession out of which no man could go, no matter where he went, without going down." On Dr. Eliot's theory, we must have "gone down" since 1868, when we "severed our connection with the Christian ministry." We will not quarrel with the good doctor for his opinion or its logical consequences, but will simply point out that one man's "down" may be another man's "up," and that, if "Truth lies at the bottom of a well," as the old proverb says it does, the truth-lover will go where truth is, no matter if it takes him "down" to the infernal regions.

THIS IS AN instance of beautiful liberality in the Christian Union, in striking contrast with the illiberality of those professedly liberal papers which have only sneers for all, however noble in character, who profess Christianity: "Tuesday of this week was remembered by all lovers of American literature as the seventy-seventh birthday of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Mr. Emerson's work in literature is of course the most striking result of his long and fruitful life, but it may well be questioned whether the simple, unaffected beauty of his character has not been more potent than all his eloquent words. The coarser ambitions of the age have had no power to draw him from his loyal devotion to truth and beauty, and in the struggle for place and fortune his serene face has been a perpetual witness to the unfailing rewards of true living. Long may he remain with us to enjoy a reverential affection such as has fallen to the lot of few men since the beginning of time."

THE SPRINGFIELD "Saunterer" sets not a high value on philosophy: "Much of all the talk at the Concord summer school will be on matters uninteresting and unintelligible, not merely to the average man, but even to intellectual men. Speculative philosophy is, as its name indicates, remote from human interests. It produces no appreciable effect on life, it has in fact nothing to do with life as we live it, its comprehension is barren except to one man in a million, and that man is not likely to be a force by virtue of it, except as all mental discipline gives force. Visitors to Concord last summer could not but observe that, while Prof. Harris and in a degree Dr. Jones spoke in enigmas to them, they had no difficulty in understanding Mr. Emerson. Mr. Underwood, in his North American Review paper on Emerson, puts this well: 'To read Kant, Hegel, and Hamilton may be intellectually stimulating, but when so much practical work remains to be done, it is like a Western settler's practising with Indian clubs to develop his muscles, when he might be felling trees and building a cabin.'"

A PAGE of the Czar's diary, if we may believe a San Francisco paper, runs as follows: "Got up at 7 A.M., and ordered my bath. Found four gallons of vitriol in it, and did not take it. Went to breakfast. The Nihilists had placed two torpedoes on the stairs, but I did not step on them. The coffee smelt so strongly of prussic acid that I was afraid to drink it. Found a scorpion in my left slipper, but luckily shook it out before putting it on. Just before stepping into the carriage to go for my morning drive, it was blown into the air, killing the coachman and the horses instantly. I did not drive. Took a light lunch of hermetically sealed American canned goods. They can't fool me there. Found a poisoned dagger in my favorite chair, with the point sticking out. Did not sit down on it. Had dinner at 6 P.M., and made Baron Laischounowonski taste every dish. He died before the soup was cleared away. Consumed some Baltimore oysters and some London stout that I have had locked up for five years. Went to the theatre, and was shot at three times in the first act. Had the entire audience hanged. Went home to bed and slept all night on the roof of the palace."

KESHUB CHUNDER SEN has sunk into a mere mystagogue, according to recent reports. This is from the Springfield Republican: "The Brahmo Somaj of Eastern India, which has been for a number of years the most vigorous religious movement apparent among the educated Brahmins, has recently begun under its leader, Keshub Chunder Sen, an extraordinary proselytism modelled on the Salvation Army in England. Great meetings are held, pilgrimages and processions carried on, and open air preaching attended by thousands is conducted by travelling preachers. This movement was originally intended to restore the primitive Aryan faith, and has been contemplated with considerable interest as likely to affect a radical change in native religious thought. It has degenerated, however, into a wild mysticism which, as M. D. Conway says in describing it, is essentially Semitic in its manner and manifestations, and it is accompanied by religious dances curiously like the manifestations of Shakers and Quakers in this part. It is at present, with all its extravagances, a growing religious movement which counts its Asiatic devotees by hundreds and its believers by thousands."

THE PARIS correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing of Victor Hugo and his new poem Religions and Religion (for a copy of which, in the original, we acknowledge our indebtedness to the kindness of a subscriber to THE INDEX, Mr. B. Gerish, American consul at Bordeaux), reports the following as the ripe fruit of the great novelist's life-long experience: "Victor Hugo says that he feels he is on the threshold of eternity, though his body is vigorous and his mind in splendid working order. Before taking leave of this existence, he wished to write something which God would accept in proof that the talents he gave him had not been thrown away. Religion was the saving grace of human societies. It drew them together and fused them into a vast brotherhood and sisterhood. Religions were walls of separation. They were the custom-houses of the human soul, erected by priests who wanted to coin money out of the soul's highest needs. As the final day approaches, Victor Hugo loves more profoundly the God revealed to him in Nature, in his conscience, and in history. He is now seized with a holy ardor to preach this omnipotent and all-present Father, to affirm his providential care for the universe, and to hold up to ridicule and contempt the atheists, the materialists, and the dogmatists of the old religions. The tendency of the atheistical creed was to eat, drink, and be merry to-day, because atheists had no future before them. Atheism would suppress posterity. It had no affection for coming generations. Victor Hugo turned a deaf ear when the name of Mr. Bradlaugh was mentioned."

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.....Tenaft, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABBENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Ader.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

Chartered by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Hale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N. Y.
 Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, case, N. Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N. Y. waukee, Ill.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. J. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. Y.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 T. C. GAGE, Fayetteville, N. Y. HOPE WHIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Al-cuse, N. Y. CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 EBEN TURK, Chelsea, Mass. JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syra-bany, N. Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N. Y. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
 E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. D. M. MORREY, Malden, Mass.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N. Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mass. D. B. MORREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

[For THE INDEX.]

Proportional Representation.

BY L. F. C. GARVIN, M.D.,
OF LONSDALE, R. I.

Of the several departments of government, that branch of the legislature which directly represents the people, commonly known as the Lower House, is the most important. It alone is the legitimate substitute for the assembling of the whole people, now become impossible; and, in the event of serious conflict with the Executive, the Judiciary, or the Upper House, must override each and all of them.

What a Representative Body should be.

A body possessing such power and prestige cannot too perfectly represent the citizens for whom it stands. In the words of Mirabeau, "That presentation should bear the relative proportion to the original, precisely as a map brings before us mountains and dales, rivers and lakes, forests and plains, cities and towns." To use the figure of another, it should be an exquisite mirror, reflecting in miniature the leading political sentiments of the people.

It does not follow that the average intellect, morals, and opinions of the community must be portrayed in the legislature. If a thousand workmen were about to invest their earnings in a mutual savings bank, they would not be so short-sighted as to select for the board of directors the average men among them, but would look for the few, who, from their high character and knowledge of financial matters, commanded general confidence, and were capable of instructing all the others. So a republic ought to be less impulsive, less improvident, less ignorant, less selfish than a pure democracy. Because a member fails to accord with his constituency in all matters, we may not conclude that he misrepresents them. As multitudes may comprehend a law which they could not have originated, so upon explanation they may approve a transaction to which at first they were hostile. The erasure of the names of the battles of the Rebellion from the flags of the regular army, when first proposed by Charles Sumner, was exceedingly distasteful to the North, and brought upon him the censure of the Legislature of his State. In another year, that condemnatory vote was rescinded; and, had the life of the great statesman been spared, his triumphant reflection to the Senate was assured. "The instincts of the people are right." While they properly require of a representative agreement in general principles, they will not reject him because of minor differences. They dimly recognize a truth propounded, I believe, by John Stuart Mill: What use is there of study, if, after all, the conclusions of the scholar remain the same as those of the unlearned?

The philosophical Guizot has said, "The sole object of the representative system . . . is to discover and concentrate the natural and real superiorities of the country, in order to apply them to its government." And we may feel assured that the people will be more than satisfied, if they can raise to the offices of greatest dignity and influence those of their fellow-citizens who are best fitted to make happy and ennoble the generation and posterity.

Legislatures not Representative.

If the Legislature ought to delineate every phase of political belief, each in its due proportion and by its ablest expounders, it is profitable to inquire next how nearly that perfection is now attained.

The census of 1870 showed in the State of Massachusetts 312,770 adult males; the total vote at the fall election of 1874 was 185,990; hence, 49 per cent. absented themselves from the polls. In the spring of 1875, the town of Lincoln, Rhode Island, which may be taken as a sample of the State, had enrolled electors, as follows: property holders, 568; registered voters, 611; total, 1,179. The whole number of votes cast at the annual election of Governor and members of the General Assembly was 532, indicating an absenteeism of 647. That is, in a contest at which was polled, with a single exception, the largest vote ever before cast at a State election, of every 100 voters 55 stayed at home. Such lack of interest in an absolute monarchy might be harmless, but in a commonwealth it may well excite solicitude and alarm. Ours being a coöperative government, whose completeness as a whole depends upon the working of all its parts, the mere quiescence of one-half of the individual coöperators detracts from the strength of the organization to at least that degree. It is not the worst elements of society that stay away from the polls, nor yet the best, but an intermediate class which is not powerfully actuated either by duty or greed. Evidently, neither law-givers nor laws receive any impress from the convictions embodied in that large section of the community which neglects the first act of citizenship.

Another very considerable fraction of voters is not merely unrepresented, but misrepresented. In Massachusetts, the whole number of votes cast for congressmen in the year 1872 was 145,632, of which Republicans polled about six-tenths, Democrats three-tenths, labor reformers and prohibitionists one-tenth. Although the relative strength of parties had been substantially the same for twelve years before, and so continued for two years longer, the entire congressional delegation of thirteen were sent by the Republican party. Consequently, since the commencement of the Rebellion up to the forty-third congress, fifty thousand voters of one of the most influential States in the Union had no voice in national affairs. If the sentiment of Massachusetts has been mirrored at Washington, one-third of the reflecting surface has been obscured.

But is the majority itself really and fairly represented? If that much could be asserted, since the major part of Americans are honest and sensible, there would be no occasion to despair of national prosperity, however much reason the minority might have to complain.

No better way can be devised of determining the degree of perfection of representation than to analyze the limitations which are thrown about an individual voter of the dominant party. A perfect representation demands no less than that each elector should have the privilege of taking his choice of all other electors,—to be numbered even in a small State by tens of thousands; otherwise, he may be excluded from selecting the one, and perhaps the only one, who fitly impersonates him. Making the application for convenience to Rhode Island, what are the actual restrictions upon one whose vote aids in electing a member of the Lower House?

First, each citizen is arbitrarily confined in his choice to the inhabitants of one of the thirty-six towns into which the State is divided, so that, unless he chances to dwell in the city of Providence, whose population nearly equals that of the remainder of the State, the prospect of his ever being represented satisfactorily is not great. If a citizen's lot be cast in a town of medium size, he is allowed to select from about one-fiftieth only of his fellow-voters. Just across the river or beyond an imaginary line may reside a life-long friend who possesses every requisite of a statesman. He may be a Solon and a Lycurgus combined, but the town boundary is an absolute bar to the reception from his appreciative neighbor of any direct aid into the position which he would grace.

Again, since parties are about as likely to go into another State after a candidate as into the ranks of their opponents, the individual elector whose case we are considering is restricted to his own party adherents. This, it may be said, is not an artificial, but natural restraint upon free choice. In theory, that may be admitted, but in practice it is far otherwise. The sole reason why scores of good men are kept out of office is not because their opinions clash with the majority, but that, from some accidental cause, they are enrolled with the minority. They are men who would remain forever among the "outs" rather than "rat over" to the winning side,—of whom it is common to remark: Mr. So and So is the best man for the place, but he is a Democrat.

Thirdly, within strict party lines, is our worthy elector to have his desire? It would be interesting to know how many in a given town would answer that question in the affirmative. It is safe to infer, very few. To begin with, there must be compromise. Owing to the diversity in human nature, men rarely think just alike about anything; no two set precisely the same estimate upon any individual: so that, when a small number meet together to elevate a neighbor to a position of honor, there must be a sacrifice of personal preferences. Such compromises are apt to resemble the one made between Chateaubriand and his wife as to the supper hour: she would have five o'clock, he seven, so they fixed upon six,—which suited neither. Likewise, in a caucus, conflicting opinions are reconciled by the nomination of a third person, termed "available," who has not character sufficiently salient to make enemies or create enthusiasm.

All the above limitations are unavoidable under the present electoral system. The most perfect "Protection of Majorities," such as is advocated by Josiah P. Quincy in his suggestive little book upon that subject, cannot do away with one of them.

In practice, furthermore, another evil creeps in, and is so closely connected with the system itself, that all efforts to banish its baleful influence have proved unavailing. The impediment to a rational and tolerably satisfactory compromise presents itself in a clique who make a trade of politics. To succeed in this business requires a certain sort of talent, which cannot include modesty, need not include patriotism, but usually does include self-seeking. It necessitates a knowledge of men, especially of their lower propensities, but not of the principles of government. The primary meeting, to which the elector, already considerably hampered, resorts for the selection of candidates, is unregulated by law, so that the fullest opportunity is given for a compact cabal, working together in accordance with a previous well-laid plan, to have its choice foisted upon the unorganized many as their choice. The only manner of "breaking the ring" is by the formation of a counter-clique, which, although gauged upon a higher plane, is open to like objections. It is not needful to enter into all the disagreeable and degrading details by whose means what is called the ticket of a town or electoral district is in reality that of a few self-appointed committee-men, each bent upon grinding an axe for himself. Suffice it to add, when the elector has been obstructed by district, party, caucus, and ring, what little remains of the boon, misnamed the franchise, is not likely to occasion excessive pride or pleasure.

On the contrary, a wide-spread discontent, manifested by a continual grumbling concerning every person and thing connected with the government, has come to be accepted as the necessary friction of republican institutions. Friction it certainly is, with its roughness aggravated by the consciousness that the legislature, besides failing to represent, is also incompetent.

Legislatures not Capable.

The custom of speaking contemptuously of the assembled law-makers of the United States is so universal as to require no proof; and yet the station with its responsibilities and honors is calculated to inspire the minds of all citizens with unmingled respect. In the early days of our history, the encomiums from abroad were reëchoed and redoubled in the hearts of a partial public at home. But, in consequence of the growth of abuses in the manner of constructing the legislature, its members now occupy, but do not fill the position. "Like master, like man," is preëminently true here, where master and man are one and the same individual, or very near akin; since the manager of the caucus secures the nomination and election of himself or his friend. Hence it occurs that men of very ordinary capacity tinker at laws which they do not comprehend, and, containing within themselves no single element of real progress, provide a government but little better than none at all. Laws are passed at one session, amended at the next, and repealed at the third,—all without any change in the wishes of the people. Multitudes of acts, often impossible of execution, make the statute book an insoluble mystery to the common mind, to the benefit of no one class of the community save the legal profession. Legislation goes on without system; trivialities monopolize the attention of members; subsidies impoverish the treasury; special legislation gives to those who have; justice is crucified, while the people who pay the bills are neither instructed nor edified by the proceedings. Well may Professor Francis A. Walker, long an observant looker-on at Washington, characterize all our legislation as "ignorant, clumsy, and brutal." Those who could make it otherwise, the independent thinkers on political subjects, are left at home. In many States, it is observed that the ablest arguments upon any measure before the assembly do not occur in its sessions, but come from outsiders, before a joint committee or through the press. When important commissions are to be formed, such as have investigated the subject of taxation in New York and Massachusetts within a few years, they are taken from private life. The assembled wisdom being unequal even to the task of selecting the commissioners, that duty devolves upon the governor. It is found that better material can be obtained for a Constitutional Convention which meets but once, and is an occasion of work rather than show or profit, than for the annual sessions. Hence, in Missouri and other States where new constitutions or amendments have been under consideration, it was proposed that certain powers, hitherto left to the legislature, should be embodied in the organic law. For instance, such necessary provisions as that "no law shall be passed except by bill," "that no bill shall be amended 'so as to change its original purpose,'" "that every bill shall be read on three different days in each house," etc. [the Nation, July 15, 1875], designed to guard against hasty or fraudulent legislation, have been so frequently suspended for the occasion, or for the session, that it is no longer safe to leave them discretionary.

The Prospect of Improvement.

Not does the future hold out any prospect of improvement, so long as the present system, found already antiquated by our fathers in 1776, is continued. The temptations of patronage and the lobby, multiplying rapidly with the growth of the country, constantly tend to place more money and power in the hands of party managers; so that what is now bad must become worse. It is only within the past twenty years that bribery has assumed prominence in the political campaigns of New England. Now, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and even New Hampshire, which used to raise men, are openly carried by the lavish expenditure of money. The conclusion of observers like Dr. Bellows is therefore natural: "Science is the only safe pursuit for men of genius in this country." Unless, however, the ingenuity of Yankees has been overrated, an opportunity will be afforded the savans to apply their science to the art of government.

The triumph of Civil Service Reform will not do it. That will benefit the nation rather than the States, the cities rather than the towns, appointed rather than elected officers, and remove but one of several pitfalls which beset the unwary Congressman. It will merely force the unscrupulous to pay their henchmen with some other coin than government office.

The "Protection of Majorities" by a legal and rational primary meeting, in which the advice of the wise and disinterested will have due weight, cannot bring about the desired result, unless we are ready to give up as a mere figure of speech the thrilling idea of "government of the people, by the people, and for the people"; unless we are prepared to subscribe to a government by a majority of the majority, often in sentiment a minority of the whole; unless we imagine that statesmen can assume, as a strait-jacket, one of two sets of opinions, supplied and changed according to party exigency.

The remedy, to be effective, must be more radical than civil service reform or the protection of majorities. It is to be found in a modified form of Hare's System of Representation, similar to that which for twenty-five years has worked so successfully in the Danish Rigsraad. For the benefit of those not familiar with the work of Sir Thomas Hare upon this subject, a brief description of its operation must here be inserted.

Personal Representation.

His system forbids any vote to be counted for more than one representative. Wherever one district sends several members, very inferior men are sandwiched in with the more respectable, the voters failing to scrutinize each name upon the ticket, as they would if confined to a single alternative. The exercise of the inalienable right of scratching rarely succeeds to the extent of rendering the slate-makers any more cautious.

It does away with districts and local residence. That is, citizens may vote for those who stand for other towns and districts, and a gentleman may become a candidate for any part of the State without regard to his place of abode.

Let us suppose that the election of members of the Rhode Island House of Representatives, which occurs each spring, is to be conducted upon Hare's plan. Let it become the duty of the Secretary of State, Mr. Addeman, on and after the first day of January, to receive, and a fortnight before election to publish, in the order of age and length of service, a complete list of all candidates. It may be advisable, in order to prevent persons from offering their names capriciously, to require the payment by each of from ten to twenty-five dollars to be devoted to the discharge of all election expenses; any other use of money whatever being forbidden under a heavy penalty. Candidacy may be purely voluntary, or may be in response to the private or public request of any number of citizens, be they five or five hundred.

From the list thus formed, which will probably comprise when complete as many as two hundred names, including, without doubt, the most eminent personages in the State with any inclination for political life, seventy-two are to be selected as the representatives of the people for one year. On the night before election, after a fortnight of discussion and comparison, each voter, quietly seated at home, chooses from the number that one whom he deems most desirable, writes the name in ink at the head of a sheet of paper, and underneath, in the order of preference, he may place his second, third, fourth choices, and so on. Upon going to the polls, this paper, certified by his signature or mark in the presence of the moderator or clerk, is deposited as his vote. This is the sum and substance of the labor which devolves upon an individual elector under Hare's system. Is there not something in the contemplation of such a mode of expressing our wishes for the welfare of the Commonwealth to occasion a feeling of content and even exhilaration?

The moderator of each voting district, having first counted the votes, seals, and repairs at once to the central office, where, under the supervision of the Secretary of State, the final assignment of each is made.

The quota required to elect one member is ascertained by dividing all the votes cast in the State by the number of seats to be filled. At the given election, suppose twenty-one thousand six hundred polling-papers to be thrown. Dividing by seventy-two, the quotient of three hundred results. Each candidate whose name stands at the head of three hundred or more papers is at once pronounced a representative elect for the ensuing year. Whenever a popular favorite has more than the required quota, his name is cancelled upon all the ballots in excess, which are then transferred to the next choice upon them. By the second distribution, other candidates having acquired the necessary three hundred are declared successful. Whenever the point is reached that no other has a full quota, the remaining members are designated by the comparative majority which each candidate has, commencing with the highest and counting downwards until the last of the seventy-two seats are filled. Electors who have placed at the head of their polling-papers a name which proves unsuccessful are reckoned, when possible, in the constituency of one appearing as a later choice. Thus it may easily happen that no qualified voter in the State will go totally unrepresented, since, to avoid that catastrophe, it is only necessary for him to include in his ballot an approved candidate of such distinction that his return is certain.

At the close of the election, the constituents of each member may be known by name; and though not all fellow-townsmen, they will be united by the closer tie of concordant sentiments. Each member of the House, being supplied with a printed list of all who have given him their suffrages, will know precisely to whom he is responsible, and in most cases his character will be gauged and his influence largely determined by the class of people who made him their choice. He may expect his constituents to watch closely how he voted upon measures which they approve, what he says concerning bills which they condemn, what his animus and controlling motives. He will be aware of being pointed at with pride when worthy, and, when base or feeble, of being reserved for the due reward of a future rejection.

The Effects of the Proposed System.

What results are anticipated from the abandonment of the usual method? Under personal representation, the primary meetings will be robbed of their power, and consequently of their virus. The caucus and the convention are the natural, and now all but universal, accompaniment of numerical majorities and two party contests. They are the best known instrumentality for marshalling and drilling the combatants,—of rousing the lukewarm and compelling the recalcitrant. As a rule, interest is more aggressive than duty, the self-seeker more persistent than the patriot. Hence the preferences of the best and wisest citizens are unheeded, and overborne by the selfish trickery of a few.

Under a system of Proportional Representation, it will be out of the power of any to silence another or to render his franchise valueless. I shall not venture to predict that primary meetings will certainly fall into disuse. Those who think alike, perhaps those who bear the same party label, may meet in an informal manner to agree upon candidates; but the minority of such an assemblage will be as independent and just about as strong as the majority,—no danger of its being crushed. The reason that the defeated faction, departing from the conclave in silence, is wont, under the existing arrangement, either to stay away from the polls, vote the regular ticket, or bolt to another evil, is because resistance is hopeless. Then by the selection of a standard-bearer who is a tower of strength in himself, a small minority will be enabled to gather from other towns votes sufficient to elect. The dictatorial spirit now manifest in the stronger toward the weaker wing of the party will all vanish; the domineering master will give place to the importunate lover, and there is no telling how many bad habits he will discard to win the favor of his coy and distant fair one.

It will not be strange, however, if the caucus, or anything bearing a close resemblance to the meeting which bears that name, should die out as a useless appendage. If any one wishes to send a distinguished citizen to the House, he will simply write a note of invitation, procure the signature thereto of such as favor his election, despatch one copy of the completed request to the daily papers for publication, and another to the gentleman himself. By such means, multiplied indefinitely, more sterling candidates can be secured than primary meetings ever create.

The End of Party Duels.

Gnizot, not being aware of the relief to be afforded by Proportional Representation, wrote: "It is a great defect of representative government that, leading as it necessarily does to the systematic organization and permanent conflict of parties, it habitually divides the truth into two parts, and induces men never to consider questions on more than one side, and to see only half the ideas and facts in reliance upon which their decision must be made." [Representative Government, p. 473.] If there is anything which will rob an ordinary mortal of patriotism, and reduce him to the plane of a partisan, it is to be forced to side with one of two opposing parties in a political contest. The code of honor, which required gentlemen to prove their valor by the test of coffee and pistols, fortunately has become obsolete; owing, doubtlessly, to the fact that the civilization which has wrought the change depends more upon individual than governmental development. The legalized duel between the ins and the outs, however, is in its glory; and two parties, many of whose members by calm comparison would discover their convictions to be in harmony, are dead-set at each other's destruction. Lest the belligerents, when they find their struggles of no perceptible benefit either to themselves or their country, should lose all heart in the purposeless strife, they are goaded again into battle by a loud outcry concerning the destructive intentions of the foe: we are a set of thieves, it is true; but they are robbers and burglars, lean and lank from long deprivation.

Such is the state of affairs when the combatants are quite equally matched; but who shall depict that worse condition, when the weaker party has become cowed, beaten beyond hope? In the late Rebellion, the outscourings of the cities were tolerable when engaged in an active campaign, the sniff of powder and the whiz of lead turning their brutishness into its most useful channel; but the same regiments in camp, surrounded by non-combatants, became devils incarnate. As a duellist who has killed his man often becomes an insufferable bully, so the dominant party, which is divested of the wholesome restraint of a watchful antagonist, gives itself up to corruption. No longer compelled to give a reason for an act, it does as seems best in its own eyes, and because it so wills, although science and common-sense be plainly defied. It is high time to end these party duels with their direful days of peace,—peace made by "the lamb's lying down inside the lion." When the electoral system here under consideration is adopted, as eventually it must be, the bootless conflict will cease, long-time adversaries will smoke the pipe of peace, and find their true affinities in the ranks they have decimated.

Already the whippers-in of both parties are finding their task grow harder and harder. The people have been lashed into a frenzy of excitement so repeatedly, and when the object was accomplished, left to cool off so suddenly, that they have become in a measure callous. The army of independents, who see through and despise these partisan tricks, is larger than ever before, illustrating the truth that there can be no great evil without some small good.

While the breaking of party shackles has given liberty to some, it has only impelled others into license. Many electors, having little motive to vote one way rather than another,—a state of mind easily accounted for by what has preceded,—are easily led by wheedling, patronage, or money, to give their support to A or B, according to the relative degree of attractiveness of the immediate inducement offered. Accordingly, bribery has reached an extent and magnitude that would have amazed that founder of the Republic who uttered the prophetic warning, "Corruption in elections is the great enemy of freedom." Who can doubt that one of the most pressing duties of the hour is to reduce to the lowest possible minimum that corrupt use of money which is rapidly making our elections a farce which provokes no laughter, and causing even the friends of free government to tremble for the future? Judging by experience, little is to be expected from the heaviest penalties aimed at either buyer or bought.

The Suffrage made a Pleasure.

The problem for our lawgivers to solve is the removal of the temptation now so powerful. In a single town, the purchase of less than a score of votes at five dollars apiece has been known to turn the scale; but under the proposed system, with the whole State for a constituency, Croesus will need to buy almost an entire quota, in order to be equally sure. And, more important still, the higher motives of the electors being reinforced by the conscious possession of power and responsibility, the market price of votes will rise so high as to lead candidates to count the cost before indulging in the extravagance of a purchased seat. The intriguing politician will find, too, that office gained by the help of the depraved in society is robbed of its wonted influence, and that for them also the surest way to receive distinction is to deserve it. But, after all, the most that law can accomplish (and, when it has achieved this in any department, it has done grandly) is to render the duties which it exacts also pleasurable. So long as election-day offers but a choice of evils, men will remain indifferent to results, a prey to the rich and wicked. No insignificant bribe could induce the same persons, under healthier conditions, to forego the satisfaction of supporting a leader who expressed their cherished desires in words, and strove to frame them into law. Enthusiasm is an element in humanity to which American politics makes but slight appeal, yet one which the State can ill afford to dispense with.

Having attained the age of one hundred years, a republic ought to be prepared to receive, not to say command, a mode of representation less crude. An infant, at first, can express only his dislikes; if anything hurts, whether a pin or the pangs of hunger, he will scream and kick. In a few months, he becomes capable of manifesting a positive preference: he reaches out for a bright cherry, and clings to his mother to the rejection of a stranger. All that can be made known by attendance at the polls to-day is that less objection is felt for Mr. A than Mr. B: the attempt to express in the vote cast a genuine option would be equally effective as to have stayed at home and deposited the ballot in the fire. Our electoral system is still in its swaddling-clothes.

The Coming Representative.

If the effect of totality representation upon the private citizen will be marked, upon the character and tone of representatives, as a class, it will be far more manifest. At present there is either slight desire, positive objection, or absolute refusal on the part of those best qualified to serve in the General Assembly. Men of mind and taste are unwilling to pursue the usual course to political preferment. If by chance, as occasionally happens, one such finds his way into the Legislature, he is surrounded and enthralled by a stolid mediocrity, which is petrified by party spirit; he is a martyr futilely dashing himself against dungeon walls. "What is the use of debate, when it is enough to count noses?"

A better condition of things exists in most other representative governments, in each instance by the adoption of some of the features comprised in Hare's system. In Germany, France, and England, the representative assemblies contain a larger proportion of illustrious men than does Congress. In Germany as in England, residence in the electoral district is not required; and as a matter of fact more than half the representatives to Berlin dwell outside the respective districts which send them. In France, the scrutin d'arrondissement requires each arrondissement, which is nearly one-fourth of a department, to send one deputy, who must be a resident. The scrutin de liste makes each department an electoral district; so that citizens vote for a list of candidates, who may be non-residents, and who, in order to be successful, must have departmental reputations. "Men like Thiers, Dufarre, Laboulaye have the best chances, in this way; while the scrutin d'arrondissement would in all probability destroy their election." [Providence Journal, Nov. 13, 1875.] Like causes produce like effects in the New and Old World: small districts with local residence give small men here as there. Rhode Island, certainly, will not be pronounced overgrown or unwieldy, although her thirty-six districts be thrown into one. When a constituency must be gathered from every quarter of the State, candidates not already widely known will of necessity take measures to make the acquaintance of the public. It no longer sufficing to make friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, or of a few expert wire-pullers, appeals by the candidate and his friends from press and platform will give zest to the campaign. Such pleas are invariably addressed to the reason. Assaults which rely for their success upon the pure selfishness in human nature are made in the dark, triumphing far more surely in an ambushade than when exposed to open repulse by truth and patriotism. The real danger to the State is not that the evil will outnumber the good, but that by artifice they may stifle their voices.

At present, not content with sending commonplace minds as lawgivers, they are put under bonds not to improve. At best, the legislator is dependent upon the whim of a small district, which often mistakes its own pet schemes for the general weal; and, if he fails to support them, a period is put to his public career, however promising. To such an extent is the folly of rotation in office carried, that in the rural parts of Massachusetts it is a sufficient objection to a proposed candidate to say, "He's been." To affirm that no business conducted in a manner so imbecile can succeed would seem superfluous. The manufacturer who changed his superintendent every two years would be a laughing-stock in a New England community, and his early bankruptcy foreseen. And yet these same shrewd Yankees appear to think that a complicated scheme of government can prosper under the like absurd management. Buckle's remark applies with peculiar emphasis to us: "In the present state of our knowledge, politics, so far from being a science, is one of the most backward of all the arts." It is our suicidal district system that made it possible for Schurz of Missouri, Phelps of New Jersey, and Hawley of Connecticut, after rendering exceptionally valuable service in Congress, to be lost temporarily, or permanently, to the national councils which had no statistics of the kind to spare.

England understands her interests so much better, that she rarely lets slip a man of commanding talents from the House of Commons. Sir Robert Peel, thrown out by conservative Oxford because his views concerning the Roman Catholic question had become more liberal, was subsequently returned by Little Tamworth, which he represented to the close of his life. If a member of Congress, he would have been driven, at more than one stage of his career, to the alternative of suppressing his convictions or of abandoning public services. With us, usefulness and honesty are sacrificed to consistency. "Once a fool, always a fool," seeming to be the maxim. As an inevitable consequence, Congress is inferior to Parliament, and the legislation of the United States less scientific than that of Great Britain. The latter has a policy settled in accordance with the fundamental principles which are taught by the ablest political economists. While for more than fifty years the necessity of a gold basis to the national currency has scarcely been questioned there, we not only have had inflicted upon us an irredeemable currency, but are still so far doubtful of its ill effects as to have in prospect another Presidential campaign with that as a leading issue. The protective tariff likewise, condemned more than thirty years ago by the mother country, has scarcely passed the zenith of power with us, and has many years to wax and wane before our democracy admits the right of freemen to buy in the cheapest market.

The introduction of personal representation will rectify all this nonsense of discarding an employé so soon as he becomes really useful. The native powers of the gifted men who then compose the Legislature will be stimulated and enhanced by their independence. No longer embarrassed in action or speech by a small knot of professional politicians at whose nod he must go and come, a member need suppress nothing that is within him, may be as bold and individual as he can be, without incurring the risk of displacement. True, he may alienate a portion of his constituents; but the very peculiarity which displeases some, if indeed a merit, will attract other and more congenial admirers, resulting in a rectification of his constituency, by which he becomes a more perfect representative. In disparaging politics as a business or profession, reference is made to the illegitimate manner in which it is conducted. Politics, in the original and higher sense of statesmanship, ought to be an avocation in which the men at its head can be assured of permanent employment and livelihood. Until that point is reached, legislators, as such, will continue to be a scoff and by-word, as are the members of no other respectable calling.

In the alternation of State laws, it is profitable to keep in mind what effect will ensue to federal relations. That electoral law is good which works well at home, but better if it has a beneficial influence upon national affairs. A high—some political writers think the highest—function of a representative body is discussion. Here all topics which concern the welfare of the people should be thoroughly canvassed, the diverse views being given in full through the daily press. By this means, each annual session will become a most valuable school, instructing alike speakers, auditors, and the public at large. Here, amid the clash of argument, will be fashioned that forensic eloquence whose native air is a republic; here will be fabricated that most needed material in an age of enterprise and a nation of Yankees, the statesman. Then it may be expected that legislators will grow to a stature too large to beg or connive for a seat in Congress; then the query will no longer be, Who will do the State the least dishonor at Washington? but, Who of many fit and unexceptionable citizens will exercise the greatest influence? That the United States Senate has lost the superiority to the House of Representatives, which forty years ago was so perceptible to De Tocqueville, is due to the deterioration of State Legislatures; and, so long as the National Constitution remains in this matter unchanged, the only possibility of its retrieving lost ground depends upon their elevation.

The Coming Legislature.

The improved character of the individuals composing the Legislature of course will raise its tone as a whole. Owing to the ability of any three hundred voters to send the most trusted advocate of their special opinion, the House is in no danger of becoming the scuffling ground between Republicans and Democrats, administration and opposition, murdering justice in their eagerness to destroy each other. A dozen different knots, representing all the live issues of the day, will be scattered over the floor: here a score of earnest temperance leaders; there half a dozen radicals, who think woman suffrage the next most important move; closely, a couple of thoughtful members sent for the purpose of equalizing taxation; while not a few may be expected who have no hobby, but owe their election to a broad and deep wisdom. Any one of these coteries, in order to carry a measure, must convince others who possess less enthusiasm or knowledge concerning its desirableness and feasibility. Legislation will thus proceed with greater deliberation,—reason, conciliation, and compromise being substituted for the party lash.

When a legislature, which is perfectly representative, speaks authoritatively, the highest and final verdict of the popular will is rendered. The executive will scarcely venture to appeal in support of his course to the people as against the legislative branch of the government, knowing as he may that the one will but reëcho and ratify the utterance of the other. Now it may easily happen that Congress is at utter variance with the wishes of the people, and the possibility—I had almost said probability—of such a discrepancy leads individuals and classes, other branches of government and other governments, to be chary or rash in trusting it.

Objections Considered.

It is said, and with truth, that under Hare's system the worst characters in the community will be enabled to combine, as well as the best. The rum-sellers and (to say what many think) the Roman Catholics would each have their proportionate representation! And pray, in the name of justice, why not? If the bad characters really outnumber the good, while the State continues republican in form, then the government would be bad. It ought to partake of the nature of its citizens; otherwise, ceasing to be democratic except in name, it is become an oligarchy. But upon the conviction that the majority of the people in every State is honest rests our claim to self-government.

What is the frightful result that is anticipated by these objectors? The liquor-dealers are to send some one to the legislature who will present their case in its best light. It is for their interest that he should be able, respectable, and trustworthy. If he can prove to the satisfaction of a majority of an assembly, as above constituted, that free rum is best, then let all liquor laws be abrogated. There would be at least the good result that those engaged in the traffic would thereafter have no more cause to combine than do grocers now. Under any circumstances, the influence of a known representative of immorality would be less dangerous than that of the men now sent who are literally its paid advocates, but are so in disguise.

Furthermore, it is objected that a legislature composed of the leaders of the various isms will be a narrow-minded, hobby-riding set, hurling anathemas at one another in an assembly where they are sure of being retained by the class interests which they champion. Need it be said that this anticipation is based upon the same false premises as the former? It is the spirit of the Federalists of the last century, pardonable when universal suffrage had nowhere been fully tested, but since the presiding of Jefferson groundless. It trusts men grudgingly and hesitatingly, first putting them under bonds not to pass certain limits; it fails to comprehend the fullness of liberty which would strike off every fetter upon the completest volition, expression, and action of man; it is unable to perceive that the source of the existing disgraces of government lies in the fact that the will of the people is not done, and that the remedy consists in the removal of all friction and imperfection in the machinery by which their wishes are wrought out. Who can doubt that, to-day, if the people could do what they would, a complete revolution in officials would occur, in every case for the better? When Massachusetts, at the Congressional election of 1874, burst the bonds of party by choosing a majority of the delegation in opposition, the regular Republican candidate in each instance was inferior to his successful competitor. Experience demonstrates that the masses, when attentive and disenthralled, are able to distinguish between the smatterer and the savant, between the demagogue and the statesman.

My first impression of Charles Sumner was received from the characterization of his enemies in North Carolina. In the parlor, he was termed "a man of one idea"; on the corners of the streets, he was said to have "nigger on the brain." With what complacency did the village politicians look down upon the narrowness and ignorance of the senator, who united the frequent incompatibles of scholar and thinker, and who was a brilliant illustration of the truth that there is no better preparation for the consideration of affairs in general than the complete mastery of a single subject!

The chief, and, in my opinion, the only sustained objection to Proportional Representation is that the process of counting the votes is complicated. As has been shown, the procedure of the voters themselves is no less simple than at present. Any one capable of doing the work of a town-clerk would be perfectly able to comprehend and fulfil all the duties required of the election clerk under the proposed system. Subject to general direction by one equally efficient with the present Secretary of State of Rhode Island, it is highly probable that the whole business could be done without the occurrence of a single mistake. Should any error be suspected, inasmuch as the name of the member to whom it is finally appropriated will be inscribed upon each polling-paper before being filed away, the correctness of the disposal can subsequently be verified, or its misapplication rectified.

That its intricacy is greater than that of the existing method is granted. More time and attention will be needed than in the assortment of the votes in separate districts, simplified as the labor is by the limitation in practice to a small variety of printed tickets. Is that a sufficient reason for rejecting an improvement? The mowing-machine is more complicated than the scythe; the management of a locomotive requires greater skill than the driving of a stage-coach. Indeed, since the adoption of what in England is contemptuously termed the "American plan" of election with its hidden ballot, geographical constituencies, local residence, and numerical majorities, Anglo-Saxon ingenuity has revolutionized the instruments of private enterprise. The spinning-wheel has become a curiosity, remanded to the garret by the steam-driven mule; the threshing-machine has usurped the province of the flail; the pine knot and the tallow dip have fled before the gas light, each step of progress adding to the complexity, it is true; but who would dream of returning to the old way? Yet men will seriously talk of preserving the electoral system, because conferred upon us by the wisdom of our forefathers. "It is not by a servile crawling in the paths of our ancestors, but by following the spirit of their institutions we most fitly show our respect for antiquity." The men who wrought at Philadelphia one hundred years ago were radical among radicals, and scorned to perpetuate an evil because it was venerable.

Imagine the figure that would be cut and the success won by the granger in Illinois who should return to the use of the hoe, the rake, and the pitchfork, consecrated by the approval of his grandsire, to hand-planting and sickle-reaping, to carrying his grain to the mill and the consumer on horseback! It would be a matter of doubt which would lay the speedier claim to him, the poorhouse or the lunatic asylum. Nevertheless, such action is perfectly paralleled by the adherence to our antiquated, bungling, utterly inadequate machinery of elections.

Appropriately, indeed, does that legislation receive the epithets "ignorant, clumsy, and brutal," which for so many years has refused to make one obvious improvement in the process of electing representatives. Why is it that a nation which in the Centennial Exposition excelled in its mechanical inventions has failed ignominiously to economize the wasted power of its elections? One need not grope long for the explanation. By the action of a natural law, the inventor turns up in a machine-shop, just as the man who can keep a hotel succeeds, while the others fail. But, in politics, not that citizen who has the widest familiarity with the origin and nature of laws, who best apprehends the principles of government, and who would be most unflinching and convincing in their advocacy, goes to the legislature, but in his stead the fellow who exhibits the greatest degree of shrewdness in the manipulation of the party caucus. Emendation of political machinery can no more have its origin in an assembly so composed than the telegraph could have been invented by the Fat Men's Association.

Thomas H. Benton has pointed out that "select bodies are not the places for popular reforms." Parliamentary Reform, for instance, which in 1832 remedied the palpable injustice of the rotten boroughs, was agitated for forty years before becoming a law. A similar history attends the inception of free-trade, for which Cobden and Bright battled in the Anti-Corn-Law-League, before either of them was admitted to Parliament. The abolition of slavery, the chief advance recorded in American politics, received no encouragement in its early stage from Congress or the State legislatures. As little can it be expected of select bodies to favor a radical reform in representation, although the change is purely mechanical, and presents none of the peculiar difficulties which prevented peaceful emancipation. The real opposition of members to Proportional Representation would be that its inauguration by them would be suicidal. Some legislators are not overstocked with brains, but they know enough not to cut off their own heads. Evidently, Hare's system would say to many of them as Cromwell said to the Rump Parliament: "Get out of here. Make room for better men."

Compared with other Reforms.

As yet but a voice here and there is lifted up for a reform in the manner of representation, while tens of thousands are demanding prohibition, and thousands, woman suffrage. So far the progress of prohibition has been fluctuating and unsatisfactory, and when enacted into a law, owing to deficiencies in other parts of the code, has remained almost a dead letter. If admitted to be the judicious and timely measure which its friends believe, still it is but one of a multitude of unconnected subjects, each calling for more thorough legislative treatment. Personal representation, on the other hand, promises not only to quadruple the chances for a right and final settlement of the much-vexed liquor question, but also at one bound to perfect the source of all laws, the Legislature itself. The advocates of woman suffrage claim that its adoption will be of greater benefit than the passage of an ordinary law, because it radically alters the basis of suffrage. Admitting all that they assert, it will, as it were, but double the number of laborers in the harvest field supplied with the same antiquated implement, while McCormick's reaper, which multiplies the existing force tenfold, is left upon the hands of the inventor. If woman suffrage is so positively right as to be highly expedient, proportional representation is so pressingly expedient as to merge into a right to be demanded. Following the return of the familiar figures is wanted a revival of the Spirit of '76: we, too, need a Declaration of Independence and a Revolution, because of Taxation without (real) Representation.

THE ORTHODOX QUANDARY.

In his opening lecture upon the present condition of religious thought, Mr. Edwin D. Mead, insisting upon the lack of hearty sympathy with the scientific spirit, and the great prevalence of disingenuousness and palliation in many Orthodox quarters, spoke as follows:—

"I would not be understood to imply that this temporizing and insincerity in the ranks of Orthodoxy is greater than it is. I have no sympathy with the vulgar and brutal shout that orthodoxy and hypocrisy are synonymous terms. He must have had small experience and strange experience, who questions the sincerity and devotion of the masses of men and women in the Orthodox churches. To most, the questions which are really working the old Church's disintegration have never even been presented. The traditional beliefs have ever compassed them about like the air they breathe, becoming things of second nature, things of course; they know of no other forms with which to associate religious ideas and the religious life. Others there are, too, who seem scarcely to experience the need of accurate expression; who see the truth which constitutes the kernel of a decaying form, and see it so entirely as to forget the encompassing decay, and the necessity of embodying the truth in true and living forms, in order to its own integrity and efficacy. Deficient in puritanism or in the sense of proportion they are able to make almost any words mean almost anything; and, while sympathizing at bottom with the vital thought of the age, to use the phrases of old systems which thought has left behind, with no real feeling of untruthfulness or incongruity, with but occasional and flitting consciousness, if with any at all, that the words they speak are not the natural and fitting expression of the thoughts they think.

"But, while all this is true enough, it is no less true that Orthodoxy's pulpits and Orthodoxy's schools are full of men half-convinced of the haleness or untruth of what they have to teach, standing where they do stand with all sorts of mental reservations, damning books which they dare not read. 'A large acquaintance with clerical life,' says Phillips Brooks, 'has led me to think that almost any company of clergymen gathered together and talking freely to each other, will express opinions which would greatly surprise, and at the same time greatly relieve, the congregations which ordinarily listen to them.' 'How many men in the ministry to-day,' he asks, 'believe in the doctrine of verbal inspiration which our fathers held? yet how many of us have frankly told the people that we do not believe them?' Of the doctrine of eternal punishment, he speaks in the same way.

"No one can have a large acquaintance with the thinking young men of the time, especially with men preparing for the pulpit in the lines of Orthodoxy, without being deeply impressed by the prevailing discord, and often most painfully impressed by the purposed one-sidedness, the violent ignoring of fundamental questions, the spirit of compromise, which are so common. So palpable are the difficulties of the Orthodox position, that the number of really good minds which are drawn to the ministry is constantly becoming less and less. Journalism, and similar fields, call louder to men who would wield a legitimate influence, who would be wholly true to truth, maintain inviolate their intellectual honor, and keep themselves unspotted from the world. Dean Stanley, in his well-known Letter on Subscription, calls attention to the fact that attentive observers of the signs of the times have long perceived that the intelligent, thoughtful, highly-educated young men, who thirty years ago were to be found in every ordination, are gradually withheld from the service of the English Church. Such men cannot now subscribe to articles which did not much trouble men thirty years ago. The case in America is precisely the same. A careful survey, especially of the colleges from which heretofore Orthodoxy has chiefly recruited its ministry, a comparative study of the numbers and the quality of the men in successive classes who are aiming at the pulpit, would teach some most striking lessons.

"It is impossible for science any longer to make any fair translation of the distinctive doctrines of the old church; and the inroad which the new religious ideas have made, during the present generation, into all Orthodox circles, is well enough known. There are very few men to-day, of any considerable culture, to whom they are any longer strange or shocking. The books into which they enter, in some diluted form or other, are the books which constitute the favorite reading of the theological student at Andover or New Haven, while the dust gathers on the volume which gives bold expression to the old beliefs. The English Broad Churchmen, Robertson, Stanley, Stopford Brooke, our own Brooks,—such men give real satisfaction to the better minds in nominally Orthodox quarters; but men against whose 'soundness' no word has ever been raised earn no enthusiastic following. The great success of the lectures of Joseph Cook is an indication of the relief which the more vigorous and real minds in Orthodox circles feel in having their traditional doctrines metamorphosed into generalities, which conflict less harshly with established facts and principles of science. These men are ladders, by which great multitudes are rising to the highest planes of thought, popularizers of methods whose free application must make way with all the limitations of the traditional theology."—Christian Register, April 10.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE WHISPER OF THE VOICES.

Out of the darkness advancing,
Out of my palace of Night,
To the surface of Being I rose,
To the mystical garden of Light.

Oh, high and sweet its music rang,
The wild-bird's note was loud and clear,
But Death came by in solemn robe,
And hushed its song with his glance so drear.

And the rustling of his cerement-shroud
Filled my heart with nameless dread;
"O God," I cried, "thy name, thy name!
And where is the home of the dead?"

Now pouring out passionate tears,
I sank upon the Mother's breast,
And warmly beat her mighty heart,
Her rude arms tenderly caressed.

Then from her thousand voices weild
I heard a whisper deep and strong,—
The words were words of solemn cheer,
The murmur of a chanted song:

"We are the voices of Love,
Love is our Lord and King;
And we are the voices of Law,
For Law is Love in becoming.

"Swift are the changes of shapes,
Shimmering like facets of flame,
Yet crumbling, unmasking they flow
But into the moulds preordained.

"Dream not, and ask not His name;
Learn thou the law, and obey;
Trust to His whispers of love,
In action thou findest the way."

W. S. K.

H. U., May, 1880.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 29.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Mrs. J. C. Merrill, $7.87; W. E. Coleman, $1.60; C. H. Phillips, $2.20; H. Pratt, $3.20; Rev. S. H. Winkley, $3.20; George Iles, 25 cents; J. E. Oliver, $23.30; F. Kralich, $1; G. Grove, $3.65; Free Religious Association, $101.00; J. P. Titcomb, $1.60; W. K. Smith, $1; American News Co., $4.76.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 3, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible; it recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged May 27.....	$2,280.00
Mrs. L. B. SAYLES, Killingly, Conn.	5.00
D. H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.	2.00
A. P. WARE, Andover, Mass.	5.00
FRED. LOESER, Brooklyn, N. Y.	10.00
WALTER C. WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.	5.00

Total.....$2,307.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F.R.A.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Ninth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at the office of the Association, 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 5, 1880, at 2.30 P.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

"THE STEP NEXT."

It is intended, we believe, to publish a full report of the Annual Convention of the Free Religious Association in THE INDEX, after our friend Mr. Potter has assumed the editorship; and we will not here anticipate this report. But the main topic of the Friday morning session, "Dr. Channing, Theodore Parker, and the Step Next," is one on which we wish to make some statement now. The discussion was introduced by a paper of our own on the question, "What does Free Religion offer as the Guide of Life?" This paper was originally delivered, on invitation of the Harvard Philosophical Club, at Boylston Hall, Cambridge, March 1, 1880; and, in order to adapt it to the occasion, a new introduction was written for the late Convention. Since we propose to publish three weeks hence the entire lecture as originally delivered, in the last number of THE INDEX that we shall ever edit, and since no other suitable opportunity may occur, we publish the new introduction by itself below, as giving succinctly our own answer to the question discussed at the Convention.

What does Free Religion offer as the Guide of Life?

Great souls are the milestones of human progress. They do not make it so much as they measure it. They sum up in themselves the tendencies of an epoch, and condense the unuttered thought of myriads into speech which the myriads accept as their own. Mind is universal, cosmical, unitary; its laws are objective and unconditionally valid; and individual thinking is resultless except so far as it conforms to these laws, and therefore interprets the common experience. All the illuminating force of the world's great historic lights comes from the fact that they do but focalize, as it were, the diffused and universal light of their respective periods. Here lies the significance of biography, which would otherwise be—

"Like a tale of little meaning, though the words are strong."

Two great souls have been of late very widely commemorated in this community. The hundredth anniversary of Channing's birth, and the twentieth anniversary of Parker's death, have been celebrated with honor and gratitude for the spiritual illumination which streamed upon the world through their strong, brave, pure lives. Their virtues and their special messages to man will be dwelt upon by those who are to follow me; I name them now simply to add my tributary mite to the common praise, and to take up the problem of religion where they left it. They agreed that the supreme guide of life is religious truth; but they differed in regard to the ultimate source and test of that truth. To Channing, its ultimate source and test was the supernatural revelation of God in the objective, historical Christ. To Parker, its ultimate source and test was the natural revelation of God in the individual's subjective intuition. The stand-point of the one was Neo-Christian Historicalism; that of the other was Neo-Christian Transcendentalism. That another step forward has become necessary since the death of the great-hearted and great-thoughted Parker, twenty years ago, is now seen or felt by multitudes. For all who have kept abreast of modern thought during this period, in which the acorn planted by Darwin has become a mighty, spreading tree, neither Christianity nor Neo-Christianity of either type can maintain its place as the true guide of life. A vast change is coming over the religious world; everybody sees that. But what is this change? What is to be the guide of life, according to the teaching of Free Religion, the evident heir of Transcendentalism? What is to be the "step next"?

This question is answered unequivocally by the Constitution of our Association, the true successor and heir of Parker, by which we are all alike pledged to the SCIENTIFIC METHOD IN RELIGION. The fundamental principle of Free Religion, as laid down in the first article of our Constitution, is the assertion of the right to deal with "man's religious nature and history" in all the freedom of "scientific study"—that is, in all the freedom of the scientific method. The freedom of science is unlimited, save by the universal laws of logic and of verification; and that, neither more nor less, is the freedom of Free Religion. The method of science is our method; our Constitution acknowledges no other method, because all others are dogmatic; and the scientific method, which by our Constitution we all profess, is the one great mark which distinguishes Free Religion from all the movements that have preceded it. It is the glory of this Association to have been the first to plant itself upon the only principle by which perfect intellectual liberty in religion is assured; and further advance in the direction of larger freedom of thought seems, from the very nature of the case, to be an impossibility. Were there a "step" beyond this, I should be eager to take it now. Henceforth it remains only to use wisely and well the freedom that has been gained.

To the question, then, "What does Free Religion offer as the Guide of Life?" the answer of this Association can only be, "Science, or the known laws of Nature." I do but give the same answer in another form, when I say, "Philosophy, or Science as a whole made systematic." Philosophy needs to be reformed exactly as much as religion; and the reform it needs is exactly the same, namely, the substitution of the scientific method for the old method of dogmatism. But when once this reform has been accomplished, then science and philosophy become identical, as the systemized totality of all that man knows of the universe he inhabits. Action ought to be governed by knowledge, ought it not? Ignorant action is surely dangerous to all concerned. SCIENTIFIC PHILOSOPHY, therefore, or well-digested, well-arranged, and well-applied knowledge of the universe we dwell in, is the Guide of Life that Free Religion offers to mankind. And to affirm and practise this principle is the "step next."

Rev. W. H. Channing, Rev. W. R. Alger, Dr. Felix Adler, and Dr. C. A. Bartol spoke in the discussion that succeeded the essay. Mr. Channing thought that the "next step" would be back to Christianity. Mr. Alger and Dr. Adler thought that the "next step" now would be to take up practical work for the regeneration of society. But this would be no new "step" at all, since both Channing and Parker labored like giants in that very work, spent heroic lives in the cause of human elevation, and set examples of practical beneficence which may possibly be equalled, but surely not excelled. Moreover, what this practical work shall be must be, and will be, determined by the philosophy that is first adopted.

It surprised us not a little, we confess, when Dr. Adler demurred at and opposed our proposition that philosophy is the guide of life offered by Free Religion. Nothing is more evident than that philosophy is the guide of his own life. His Society for Ethical Culture, with all its noble activities, is nothing but the objective realization of his philosophy. His favorite motto is "Deeds, not Creeds"; bravely, unweariedly, persistently, is he acting out that motto. He surrenders the questions of God and immortality, as speculatively unanswerable; he turns away from speculation, with its painful antinomies of optimism and pessimism, because he believes that speculation cannot decide which of the two is true; he abandons the riddle of the universe as philosophically insoluble, and takes refuge in a heroic practical endeavor to help on the good in this human world of ours, to better the bad in it, and to foster (in his own beautiful phrase) the "creation of joy." But in all this he does but follow philosophy as his own guide of life. Dr. Adler is an adherent of Kant's "Critical Philosophy," the general conclusion of which is that the "speculative reason" cannot possibly solve the great questions of "God, freedom, and immortality"; but that the "practical reason" should govern life as if "God, freedom, and immortality" were proved. This general conclusion of Kant is the ground-principle, the theoretical formula, of Dr. Adler's practical action; and it is nothing in the world but philosophy of a certain sort. In fact, Kant was the chief founder of all our modern agnosticism; and Dr. Adler is, so far, his faithful disciple.

It is most true that this philosophy is not ours. Of all things, the most repugnant to our thinking is that despair of the intellect which lies at the bottom of the Kantian system. No agnosticism for us! We believe in the power of the human mind to master every difficulty in the long run, and to answer every reasonable question which it can propound to itself; and "God, freedom, and immortality" are reasonable questions. If philosophy has as yet arrived at no established truth on these great questions, it is solely because philosophy needs to be reformed as fundamentally as religion, and precisely in the same way: namely, by the substitution of the objective scientific method for the method of subjective dogmatism. This profoundly reaching revolution will eventually be wrought, and the greatest task now awaiting philosophical investigators is to effect it. But this is not the place to consider this subject. Our point is that Dr. Adler's entire movement is based upon, and guided by, a very definite philosophy, and that he himself evidently accepts it as his "guide of life." For this reason we are surprised that he should demur at our general proposition, expressing as it does the fundamental and distinctive characteristic of the Constitution of the Association of which he is the President. And the question at once comes up: What, if not science and philosophy, does Dr. Adler take as his own guide of life?

F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

In due time, though possibly in different form from that heretofore used, will come the full report of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association held last week. Not to anticipate that report, it may be well here to jot down a few notes concerning the occasion, which may serve as a kind of table of contents of what is coming.

The Committee feel well satisfied, and have reason to be, with the results of the thirteenth anniversary meeting. After the second year's meeting, one of the Boston daily papers predicted that the Association would have only an ephemeral existence, and would not survive the interest created by its own novelty. But thirteen years have passed, and that same paper is still reporting its meetings. Naturally the attendance is not so large as in some of those earlier years. Fewer people attend from curiosity now than then; nor does the place of meeting this year and last, the Parker Memorial Hall, draw in passers-by who may happen to read the placard at the door, and other casual attendants, as did the more central Horticultural Hall and Tremont Temple. Still, the attendance this year, especially considering the heat, which was unprecedented for anniversary week, was good; and the interest among those attending seemed as fresh and hopeful as in the earlier days. For the first time all the meetings, including the business session and the Festival, were held under the same roof; and as the Festival Committee had provided a substantial lunch between the morning and afternoon meetings, the building with its different halls and rooms was found a very convenient one, and offered more opportunity for social intercourse than has been possible heretofore.

At the business session, the plans which the Executive Committee reported, concerning the adoption of the publication of THE INDEX, and a more efficiently organized work under the conduct of a central office, appeared to be heartily received, and were referred back to the Executive Committee with full power to carry them into effect; while the Treasurer's report showed that a goodly sum of money had been raised for making a beginning in the latter enterprise.

At the Convention Friday morning, the discussion was well sustained in ability and interest throughout. It was characterized by the last speaker, Dr. Bartol, as the "liveliest meeting" of the week. Mr. Abbot introduced the intellectual repast with an essay worthy of himself and his subject,—"What does Free Religion offer as the Guide of Life?" His answer was Philosophy,—philosophy in its broadest sense, as the generalized and harmonized results of all scientific knowledge concerning every phase of human existence. In view of its being the centennial year of Dr. Channing's birth and the twentieth since Theodore Parker's death, it was intended that the after addresses should state the contributions made in the order of historical development by these two great religious reformers towards the coming of full freedom in religion. This part of the subject was announced as "Dr. Channing, Theodore Parker, and the Step next." But all the speakers seemed to prefer to speak on the Step next, which got rather more than its due share of attention. The speakers, W. H. Channing, Wm. R. Alger, and Felix Adler, crossed each other's orbits a good deal; but, though this perhaps detracted from the logicalness of the discussion, it very likely added to its liveliness. Certainly their speeches were listened to with intense interest, and bristled with points; and the same may be said of the few closing words of Dr. Bartol, who came as a volunteer among the speakers, but was none the less welcome for that.

The subject for the afternoon, "Liberal Principles as opposed to Sectarianism in Education," was one of even more vital interest, as having an immediately practical bearing. Mr. J. F. Clifford, who gave the essay, opened the subject broadly and carefully. He is a new speaker on the Association's platform, but for many years, even from the time that he was a student in Mr. Hepworth's Divinity School, has shown his fidelity to free religious principles. He was followed by Rowland Connor, in the early years a frequent speaker at our conventions, but latterly engaged in pursuits that have rather withdrawn him from the field. In the course of his speech, he dissected a book of child's poetry used in the public schools of Boston, showing how the young minds of its readers must imbibe from it the most superstitious theological notions. Miss Mary F. Eastman continued the discussion, making especially the point that sectarian influence in education is the foe of "intellectual veracity"; and Prof. Adler added a few earnest remarks from some experiences of his own with regard to sectarianism in the schools of New York.

The closing speech of the day, and in some respects the most enlivening, though not directly upon this topic, was made by J. L. Jones, a very liberal and very live missionary of Western Unitarianism. It was a speech inimitable and unreportable, full of the fire of natural eloquence, and none the less acceptable to the audience because of the Methodistical fervor in it nor because of the good-natured satire with which, along with his expressions of sympathy and admiration, he criticised what seemed to him the shortcomings of the Association. The key-note of this criticism was struck in his opening sentence, expressing his disappointment at finding the Association "in the thirteenth year of its existence still struggling with the dictionary." The bugle summons with which he called the Association to the struggle against not philosophic, but real and immoral materialism in the West, in a field where no religious denomination could find a hearing, met a response in many hearts present.

The Social Festival in the evening was very enjoyable, with music and speeches and conversation and refreshments interspersed. M. J. Savage presided.

W. J. P.

THE F. R. A.'S APPEAL FOR THE NEW "INDEX."

At the Annual Convention of the Free Religious Association last week, the following appeal was circulated, and supported by the officers in their speeches from the platform:—

To the Friends of Free Religion.

On the 1st of July next, the Index Association is to close its affairs and transfer the publication of THE INDEX to the Free Religious Association. . . . Under the new arrangement, the entire financial and business management of the paper is to be intrusted to a board of seven incorporated trustees, to be appointed by the Free Religious Association, and, after the first appointment, only one to be elected annually. The entire editorial responsibility and control are to be assumed by Mr. William J. Potter, the present Secretary of the Association.

The present patrons of THE INDEX, the members of the Free Religious Association, and all others interested in the development and promotion of free religion, have cause for congratulation in the fact that Mr. Potter has consented to become the editor. He is a man conspicuous for the wisdom as well as the intensity of his convictions. Bold and fearless in the presentation of his thoughts, whether in the pulpit, on the platform, or by publication, his utterances are always emphasized by a rare and singularly modest reserve that gives them peculiar force and weight. A journal in his charge will, of necessity be characterized by an absolute integrity of purpose, literary excellence, intelligent, wise, and efficient management. He will bring to the work a large heart, a keen conscience, broad mental culture, a sound understanding, and a level head. As a special feature of the paper, it can be announced that Prof. Felix Adler, the President of the Free Religious Association, is to furnish, for exclusive publication therein, each month, one of his lectures before the Society for Ethical Culture, New York. And the editor will furnish frequently, perhaps an equal number of, his discourses given to his society at New Bedford.

Book notices of current literature having a special interest to free religion, it is proposed to make a regular feature of the paper; and correspondents will be sought with reference to securing reliable information of all matters pertaining to the free religious movement, both in this country and abroad. Pains will be taken, systematically, to secure articles as far as possible on all the great phases of the movement,—as the Relations of Religion to Science, the Sympathies and the Antagonisms of the Special Religions, the Bearing of Religion on questions of Philanthropy and Social Science, the emancipation of the public schools and the State from sectarian control and bias. Competent writers in these several departments are already pledged or will be found.

Now is our opportunity to make the Free Religious Association a power in the community. We can do so by giving Mr. Potter substantial support. He must have the means to engage able contributors, intelligent correspondents, a competent assistant in the office, and to defray other expenses obviously involved in the conduct of a first-class journal. If we expect to publish and to read a good paper, we must be willing to pay for it.

In time, THE INDEX may become self-supporting; but, to continue it on a reasonably safe basis, we must raise at least ten thousand dollars, aside from proceeds of the subscription list. For this sum we now appeal.

Small donations will be gladly welcomed, but we most earnestly ask all those who have the ability to contribute sums commensurate with the importance of the object and gravity of the occasion. Send contributions to Mr. John C. Haynes, Treasurer, No. 451 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

FELIX ADLER, President F.R.A.

JOHN C. HAYNES, Treasurer.

HANNAH E. STEVENSON, Ass't Sec.

May 27, 1880.

"THE UNITARIAN BOUNDARY."

A QUERY.

I think that no one who knows me will bring against me any "railing accusation" of theological narrowness. Perhaps, therefore, it may be fitting for me to say a word on the above subject as dealt with by Mr. Abbot in THE INDEX of May 20th. My query is this: Which is narrower, "the Unitarian Boundary" or the limits which Mr. Chainey has just set up for himself? My answer off-hand is, Most certainly Mr. Chainey's.

In briefly treating this topic, the reader's pardon is asked for the writer's reference to himself. I only take the easiest way of dealing with the question.

1. I, as one Unitarian, have never regarded the Syracuse vote concerning "the Lordship of Jesus" as having any authoritative and binding force. It was only a majority vote for one year; and any other year is at liberty to reconsider. I do not feel myself obliged to believe with the majority.

2. Six years ago, in Music Hall, at the anniversary of the American Unitarian Association, I said plainly that, if Unitarianism was anything narrower than the boundary lines of the universe, then I was outside. No one has disfellowshipped me for saying so.

3. Sunday by Sunday, I freely consider all topics—God, Jesus, Bible, Church—from the scientific standpoint; and no one presumes to question my right so to do.

Now as to Chainey. He wrote me the other day, asking whether I would consider that he had a right still to be classed with Unitarians, with his society reorganized on the basis of his new ideas. I wrote him that I thought not. And the reason I gave was this, that I was not willing to narrow myself, nor to see Unitarianism narrowed, to the limits of his new platform.

Until somebody settles the question as to who is a Christian, I do not care whether he calls himself a Christian or not. Non-Christians, of Mr. Abbot's kind, I should be glad to see in Unitarian pulpits. But Mr. Chainey has become a dogmatist, of a narrow kind, and that concerning things that he himself confesses he knows nothing about. He has deliberately left out of his platform two things that are among the mightiest forces of the world, and that no rational man can escape,—the God-ideal and religion. He may call himself theist or pantheist, as he pleases. But when he proposes to say no more God at all, but only nature, then he dogmatizes negatively; and negative dogmatism is as offensive as orthodox dogmatism. The word "God" includes nature, and whatever there may be in the universe that is not man. The word "nature" assumes that the negative view of the great open question is decided. It is broader and more philosophical to leave it open.

Then as to religion. What is it? It is the feeling and action of man springing out of his relations to the universe. So long as the universe and one man remain, so long religion must survive.

Unitarianism then has not turned Mr. Chainey out. He has himself built about himself a fence narrower than the lines of Unitarianism; and now he asks if we will be willing to call his self-imposed limitations Unitarianism. For one, I say, No. My Unitarianism is a good deal broader thing than that. It is as broad as all ascertainable truth. When any authoritative voice tells me I am not a Unitarian on that basis, then I am out. If anybody builds a fence, I propose to climb it. But as yet I find none.

M. J. SAVAGE.

[We append here a brief article from the Rochester,

N.Y., Chronicle, and postpone at present all further reply to our friend's article.—Ed.]

A Question of Belief.

Two-thirds of the members of the Unity Church at Evansville, Ind., have voted to retain their pastor, Rev. George Chainey, who recently stated that he was not a Christian, and resigned. This action has raised some interesting legal and theological questions. In 1876, Mrs. Ann Maidlow left the sum of $6,000 to three trustees to establish a Unitarian Church at Evansville. With this substantial help, the Unity Church has been kept up. The opponents of Mr. Chainey claim that, if Mr. Chainey be retained, the Church will no longer be Christian as implied in the gift of Mrs. Maidlow, and that the gift must be surrendered. They assert that the Church cannot be Unitarian without being Christian, and in the legal proceedings that are likely to follow the exact status of Unitarianism will be sharply defined, if legal talent can get at the question.

The holding of the Church depends upon what "Unitarian" means. Mrs. Maidlow's nephew, now President of the Board of Trustees, adheres to Mr. Chainey, and urges that his views are in full accord with those of Mrs. Maidlow. The Orthodox people of Evansville favor the claims of the minority, and now stoutly assert that the Unitarians are Christians, although Christian fellowship has been hitherto denied them. The great anxiety seems to be to send Mr. Chainey away from Evansville. Mr. Chainey is an Englishman by birth, and is twenty-nine years of age. He was formerly pastor of the Methodist Church of Napierville, Ill. He left that Church in 1877, having publicly declared that he was a Unitarian. He was immediately called to Evansville. It is said he is a devoted student of modern rationalism.

Whatever may be the outcome of it, Mr. Chainey has taken the honorable course in publicly announcing his disbelief, if he has really abandoned the tenets which a Christian minister is expected to teach. He has the credit of sincerity, at least, when such sincerity would probably end in personal loss.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S LETTER TO A FRIEND.

The following letter, with the writer's permission, has been sent to us for publication:—

THORNDIKE, Mass., May 26, 1880.

DEAR FRIEND:—

I have read the scurrilous attack on Mr. Abbot, myself, and others in the Truth Seeker of the 15th. Thanks for your suggestions; but I shall send no reply. The last communication I sent that paper, in vindication of myself from Bennett's malicious thrusts, was kept a month, and returned to me unpublished. But these vindictive assaults can injure nobody in the judgment of men and women whose respect is worth having. All such mean and mendacious attempts to injure reputation recoil against their authors. I regard it as a credit that I am abused by such a man as the course that Bennett has pursued proves him to be; while I feel honored by his association of my name with that of Mr. Abbot and some others he has the past two years so persistently defamed,—men with whom he is not to be compared, but contrasted,—men immeasurably his superior in every intellectual and moral quality,—men who have done as much to elevate liberalism as he has done to trail its standard in the dust.

I am unable to imagine the immediate cause of this unscrupulous attack, so full of falsehood and vile insinuation, unless it be a tract recently published, giving extracts from some of his filthy letters,—a tract I never saw till I received a copy by mail. But he has quarrelled with, and applied the foulest epithets to, nearly every editor and advocate of liberal thought in the country who has had the temerity to criticise his course or object to his method; and how could I expect to escape his malice? But for my extreme aversion to personal quarrels, which has kept me from making any public reference to private grievances, I should have been long ago honored with those who have been objects of his lies, scurrility, and abuse. Conciliating as I have been, he has done what he could, by methods peculiar to himself, to injure me with the liberal public; and, if he has accomplished nothing in this direction, it has been owing to no lack of disposition, but to the insignificance of his influence and that of his paper among liberals of intelligence, character, and worth. I now recall vividly some of the expressions of Mr. Abbot, giving his estimate of the man. I am obliged to acknowledge that from the first his insight into Bennett's character surpassed my own; and I am now convinced that the latter has received from me, against the advice and protests even of leading liberals, a consideration of which he was wholly undeserving.

When Bennett was arrested for selling the coarse pamphlet with a salacious title, although I thought he had been guilty of great folly, yet, in my adhesion to the principles of freedom of the press, I protested against his arrest, and sent him five dollars as a contribution to the expense of defending himself. When he was, as I thought and still think, unjustly sentenced, I did what little I could toward getting him pardoned. I called on him twice during his imprisonment; but I notice he makes even these visits, with which he professed to be much pleased, a subject of fault-finding and contemptible misrepresentation. I do not now regret what I did, even though I have come to see the baseness of his character.

Nearly every statement in regard to me in his attack is either a downright falsehood or a mean distortion of facts. The best way, I am satisfied, is to have nothing to do with such a man. Point out one falsehood, refute one slander, and he will invent another; and there is no lack of men like himself who, from various motives, join him in this disreputable business.

Very truly yours,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

THE LONGWOOD MEETING.

Our valued friend, Mr. Mills, sends us this notice of a widely known Liberal gathering, held annually for many years at Longwood, Pennsylvania:—

Annual Call.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of Progressive Friends will be held at Longwood, Chester County, Pa., on Fifth-day (Thursday), June 3, 1880.

This meeting is called in the interest of truth, humanity, religion, and progress; and it seeks in a catholic and earnest spirit to consider and to study those questions that appertain vitally to human welfare, and in particular those which come nearest and are most pressing in the present hour and time.

It extends cordial invitation to all of whatever name or belief, who feel interest in this behalf, to attend this, its annual gathering, and especially to those whose interest is practical, one that prompts to cheerful labor and service in behalf of the upbuilding of humanity.

The hour is propitious and prophetic, the opportunities are high, and the responsibilities of the gravest. Come, that we may learn in our conferring together more of the duties and the privileges that are before us. Come, that we may gather in each other's presence fresh renewal, mutual encouragement, strength, and inspiration.

Able and well-known speakers from abroad are confidently expected to be present and aid in the deliberations.

All communications addressed to the meeting should be directed to Isaac Mendenhall, Hamorton, Chester County, Pa.

Longwood is one and one-half miles from Rosedale Station on the Philadelphia and Baltimore Central Railroad.

CHAS. D. B. MILLS, } Clerks.
PATIENCE W. KENT, }

HAMORTON, Pa., May 5, 1880.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON has just attained the seventy-seventh year of his age, accompanied with "honor, love, obedience, troops of friends."

REV. ROBERT COLLYER delivered a beautiful, characteristic, prose poem on children, at the Unitarian Sunday School meeting in Boston last week.

IT HAS BEEN suggested that it would have been a good time for Col. Ingersoll to be around with his lecture on "Hell" during the hot weather we have lately been having.

MR. ARCHIBALD FORBES, the well-known war correspondent of the London Daily News, will come to see us next September, and will do some lecturing while in the country.

MR. MONCURE D. CONWAY will sail for America in July, accompanied by his wife and children, and will remain here for four months. He will put his eldest son—a young man just attaining his majority—in a law office at Cincinnati.

TAINE, THOUGH fifty-one years old, is one of the hardest students of the day, yet he recently penned the general experience with autograph albums, in one he was asked to write in: "One can never write anything when he has not an idea; and that is always my condition when before an album."

MISS COLLINS, of Boffin's Bower repute, has made elaborate arrangements for the observance of the tenth anniversary of the death of Charles Dickens, on the evening of June 9th. Miss Collins is entitled to much sympathy and praise for the energy she has displayed in behalf of her meritorious enterprise, and the success that has attended it.

JOHN F. QUARLES, a colored lawyer who has practised law for several years in Washington, D.C., and who for the past three years has been United States Consul at Malaga, Spain, has been admitted to practice in the courts of the State of New York by the General Term of the Supreme Court. Mr. Quarles is tall, good-looking, and very black. He was born in Augusta, Ga., as a slave; first studied law in Georgia, and was subsequently admitted to practice at Washington.

IT IS NOW pretty generally known that Prof. Felix Adler is henceforth to have added helpfulness and sympathy in his work. The Professor was most auspiciously and happily married Monday, June 26, at Brooklyn, N.Y. The bride, Miss Goldmark, is the daughter of Dr. J. Goldmark, a well-known wealthy and educated German gentleman of Brooklyn. The legal portion of the ceremony was performed by Mayor Howell, of Brooklyn, in the presence of several friends, at an early part of the day. In the evening, Dr. Goldmark's commodious and handsome residence and beautifully illuminated garden were thrown open to a most hospitable and cheerful "reception," which was attended by a company of several hundred persons. Among the many valuable and interesting tokens of friendship with which the happy bride and bridegroom were affectionately remembered, one of the most noteworthy was the presentation, by several friends, of a donation entitled "The Library Fund," for the Professor's personal use, amounting to the exceedingly generous sum of $3,000. Such indications of cordial sympathy and hearty appreciation between the Professor and his people is an augury of the best results in the mutual work and aspirations upon which they have entered and toward which they are so harmoniously striving. Blessings upon the union just consummated between Professor Adler and his young wife, and blessings upon the more public union which subsists between him and the Society for Ethical Culture, and blessings upon the great liberal cause which he so conspicuously and effectively represents! May prosperity and long life attend them!

FOREIGN.

THE PERMANENT Italian Catholic Committee at Bologna has addressed a circular to the district committees, intimating that Catholics should abstain from voting in the coming elections.

THE GOETHE monument at Berlin will be unveiled on the 1st of June, in presence of the German Emperor and Empress. They both knew Goethe intimately, the Empress being a daughter of Karl August, Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the patron and friend of Goethe, and their courtship and marriage at Weimar having occurred during the latter years of Goethe's life.

A GREAT FEDERAL SINGING FESTIVAL will be held at Zürich in July, beginning on the 4th and terminating on the 11th. Seven hundred of the best vocalists Switzerland can produce, assisted by singers from various parts of Germany, will take part in the proceedings; and a building capable of accommodating an audience of 6,000 persons is in course of erection near the lake.

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Protestant Reformation Society, in London, Lord Oranmore and Brown, who presided, referred to the appointment of the Marquis of Ripon as Governor-General of India, and remarked that the conduct of the noble marquis in negotiating the treaty of Washington did not augur well for his success as a diplomatist. He asked the meeting to join in a solemn protest against the appointment of a pervert to Rome to that high position.

THE LATEST REPORT of the Municipal Statistical Department for Munich shows that the number of marriages in that city has been annually declining since 1875. This is quite in accordance with what has taken place generally throughout Germany. In 1875, the number of marriages was 2,318; 2,067 in 1876; 1,947 in 1877; 1,902 in 1878; and only 1,621 in 1879. But these diminishing figures do not fully represent the rate of decrease, for the population of the city has been all the time increasing. In 1875, the proportion of marriages to every 1,000 inhabitants was 12.18, whereas in 1879 it was only 6.99. Some interesting particulars are given in the report. Thus, 83 per cent. of the men married in 1879 had been previously unmarried, and 90 per cent. of the women. The corresponding proportion in 1875 had been for each sex ninety-three. The youngest bridegrooms were in their twenty-first year, the youngest brides in their sixteenth. The oldest bridegrooms were seventy-nine and seventy-six years old respectively. The oldest bride was sixty-eight. This lady, who had been hitherto single, chose for her partner a widower some ten years younger than herself. The youngest bridegroom married a widow double his own age; while the youngest bride, a girl barely fifteen years of age, had for her husband a man in his 33d year. In 17 per cent. of the marriages, the parties belonged to different religions.

MR. HERBERT GLADSTONE, the youngest son of the Premier, was elected for the borough of Leeds without opposition. The new member addressed the electors from a platform erected in front of the Town Hall immediately after the official declaration of his return; and a vast concourse of people, variously estimated at from fifteen thousand to twenty thousand, assembled in Victoria Square at the hour named for the declaration. Mr. Gladstone in his address said the people must remember to be tolerant of the Liberal Government, and to have confidence in it. He believed that all the interests which were most dear to sections of the party would receive fair and full consideration. He trusted that in future they would show to him, as a supporter of the Liberal Government, that sympathy and forbearance which he expected them to show to the Government itself. Mr. James Kitson, Jr. (with whom Mr. Gladstone and his mother had been staying), mentioned that the Prime Minister had that day been returned unopposed for Midlothian, an announcement which evoked the heartiest cheers. He also stated that it was Mr. Gladstone's intention to be introduced in the House of Commons next week by his two sons, and that Mr. Herbert Gladstone would be appointed one of his father's private secretaries. After cheers had been given for the new member and his father, the large crowd dispersed.

Communications.

A REVOLT IN ORTHODOXY ITSELF.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 20, 1880.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I herewith enclose to you a report of a sermon delivered last Sunday by Rev. Myron Adams, pastor of Plymouth Church, the large Congregational Church of this city.

Yours, etc., CHAS. H. TRUE.

Conditional Immortality.

THE THEORY BROACHED BY REV. MYRON ADAMS AT PLYMOUTH CHURCH.—A STARTLING SERMON.—WHAT THE MEMBERS OF THE CONGREGATION HAVE TO SAY ABOUT IT.

At the close of the services at Plymouth Church yesterday morning, the Rev. Myron Adams requested all his congregation to be present in the evening, as he had something to say to them that might possibly affect his standing in the Church. Accordingly a large congregation assembled together in the evening, who listened to a sermon that broached some startling theories from a theological point of view. The reverend gentleman took his text from Romans, "Let love be without dissimulation," and then proceeded to state that he proposed to study the state of Christianity at the present time with reference to the doctrine of eternal punishment. Was the Church in a state of decadence? Those in the Church claimed it was not, while those outside were equally certain that it was. Bishop Simpson, in an eloquent discourse recently preached at Cincinnati, had stated that the Church was never so prosperous; but some might think this was merely whistling to keep up their courage, and others have stated that never in its history was there such a wide-spread and general denial of God and his revelation. He believed that the Church was being crushed with scepticism, and that the fault of the matter lay within the Church itself. Were the Church pure, it would be unassailable; but it had presented to the world a Deity who was not good and just, and had forbidden any investigation into the subject. It has taught that God for his own pleasure keeps millions of his creatures in torture. If a man were to keep a fellow-being alive a year for the sole purpose of torture, we would cry aloud at his cruelty; yet we hear it said of God that he will eternally keep the majority of the human race in torment. We say that he foreordained men for torture, and that he is infinitely good. Men will say, Then give us wickedness instead of God. A constitutional principle of the mind stands in the way of accepting such a being. Men may fear him, but they cannot love him. The opinion of John Stuart Mill is rapidly gaining ground,—that such a God is a mere chimera of a disordered imagination: he is an infinite enemy, not an infinite friend. Rather than accept him, many are forced into the awful darkness of atheism.

The preacher then proceeded to argue on the belief of conditional immortality and the annihilation of the soul. Was it not conceivable that souls unfit for the kingdom of righteousness should be permitted to lapse out of being? Some years ago, in conversation with an eminent Presbyterian divine, he denied that God could annihilate a soul. The gentleman asserted most positively that he could. He asked, "If He could do it, why does He not, if it will end the torments of so many?" Leslie Stephens said, "If this be the end of Christianity, better atheism by far." The present age was one of personal convictions, and not priestly teachings. It was hard to break from the trammels of old beliefs; but we were dishonoring God with our traditions, and the doctrine was fostering the darkness of the world. It raised up Christians to worship and adore a gigantic Moloch, and sank the Father in the tyrant. He did not need to go outside the New Testament to prove his assertions; and, after a careful study of the passages on which this doctrine rested, he had come to the conclusion that it should not be believed. It was a merciless doctrine of the past ages, and the world will yet come to believe it the doctrine of the devil. It is urged that God is just. What worlds of torture have been done in the name of justice! We did not torture prisoners any more, because it was held to be cruel; and yet this cruelty was imputed to God. Could it be just to do an injustice to punish any one eternally? If this were so, heaven would be only fit to be inhabited by savages; and they would be on their knees in tears to petition God to cease being just sufficiently long to annihilate the poor suffering creatures. The reverend gentleman closed his very eloquent discourse with the following quotation from Canon Farrar: "Here I declare and call God to witness that, if the popular idea of hell were true, I should be willing to renounce an immortality of happiness, if thereby I could save a single soul. I can conceive of no happy immortality while millions of my fellow-creatures, some of whom I had dearly loved, were at the same time writhing in agony and without hope."

At the conclusion of the services, an application was made by a representative of the Union to allow the sermon, which had been read from a manuscript, to be published. Mr. Adams declined, however, urging that it would draw the fire of other ministers, and he was not ambitious of seeking notoriety in this way. The theories he had advanced had long been studied by him as well as by other ministers, and the Church would yet have to bend to the growing belief. Several members of the congregation were subsequently interviewed on the stand they intended to take. The matter had come upon them too suddenly for them to decide; but the general feeling seemed to be in favor of the sermon, as the following interviews show:—

D. C. Hyde, President of the Board of Trustees,

was the first visited; and he believed the majority of the church would sustain Mr. Adams in his schism. It was a bold step for an Orthodox minister to take, and he looked upon it as the possible beginning of a revolution in church doctrine. He did not think there would be a church meeting, unless it created a good deal of disturbance, which he scarcely thought likely. There was no occasion for Mr. Adams resigning. Congregational Churches were authority unto themselves; and, if the congregation accepted these doctrines, that was all that was necessary. For himself, he indorsed them; and he believed nine-tenths of the Board of Trustees were of the same opinion.

The next gentleman interviewed was ex-Senator William N. Emerson, who was also cordially in favor of the stand taken. Some time ago, in a conversation he had held with Mr. Adams, he told him that he did not see what use there was in his going to church, as he did not believe in the doctrines as preached; and in the conversation the reverend gentleman foreshadowed his ideas, which were promulgated yesterday. He did not know how it would take in the church, but he thought he would be generally sustained. If the majority indorsed the theory, that would be all there was to it; and he did not look for any meeting of the church. It was a bold step and one that he thought would work a revolution, but he did not doubt that Mr. Adams would be sustained.

L. P. Ross cordially indorsed the sentiments of Mr. Adams, and believed that the church would sustain him. If it did not, he would follow Mr. Adams to another church. There might be a few who would object to them, but he did not think a meeting would be held.

S. D. Porter was rather conservative about the expression of his views, and did not wish to be interviewed. None of the members had been to see him, and he had heard no talk about a church meeting.

M. D. L. Hayes also did not wish to express his ideas further than to say that he thoroughly believed in Mr. Adams. He was a man who acted from purely conscientious motives and with no idea of sensationalism. He also thought there would be no meeting of the church on the subject.

Ex-Ald. Newell H. Stone took the opposite side. He did not hear the sermon, for the reason that he did not wish to. He thought Mr. Adams was a man without creed, and it would not surprise him to hear him preach any doctrine. He did not believe in upsetting a revelation that had stood the test of hundreds of years and made men better. He did not know what action would be taken, but thought the Congregational Council would have to act on the subject.

A great many other of the members who did not care about being interviewed expressed themselves as pleased with the stand taken, and the general opinion seemed to be that there would be no meeting of the church on the matter. This morning the Presbyterian ministers held a meeting in the study of Mr. Adams at Plymouth Church, where the sermon was discussed; and it is understood that all present disagreed with his teachings.—Rochester Union, May 17.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S TRIAL.

THE SUIT AT IRWIN STATION, PA.—EXPRESSIONS OF LIBERAL SENTIMENT.

MR. EDITOR:—

Judging from the number and tone of the letters I have received the past few days, in regard to the case at Irwin Station, Pa., the feeling among Liberals is one of surprise and indignation at the injustice of the verdict, with a strong desire to have it decided whether a man can be punished with fines and penalties for giving an anti-Christian lecture in the State of Pennsylvania.

I have never, in a single instance, made an appeal to the Liberal public in my own behalf for money. But here is a case in which Freethinkers throughout the country must feel a common interest, and the extracts from letters given below probably express the general sentiment. A few bigots at Irwin Station have attempted to punish me and two other gentlemen for our temerity in opposing Christianity; and they found a judge willing to charge a jury that Christianity is a part of the law of the State of Pennsylvania, and that if my lecture was anti-Christian it was illegal, and the parties from whom the hall was obtained were under no obligation to respect the contract. The lecture, for giving which I was charged with "immorality," was a discourse showing the truths of science and the absurdities of theology. It is a clear case of persecution.

We have appealed, and shall contest the case thoroughly before submitting to the unjust verdict rendered against us. The suit will involve considerable expense; and following the kind suggestion of the editor of the Investigator, and the advice of nearly every one who has written me on the subject, I have decided to receive contributions to meet the expenses of this suit. All contributions will be acknowledged in the Investigator, and every dollar received will be used to the best possible advantage to prevent this effort to make infidelity a crime, punishable with penalties and fines, in the State of Pennsylvania. Contributions and pledges of contributions—to be sent when needed—may be addressed to me direct at this place, Thorndike, Mass., or through the office of the Investigator.

I give extracts from a few of the letters recently received by me.

A prominent Liberal of Providence, R. I., writes:—"I am gratified that you have appealed from the decision of the stupid bigot of a judge, and I hope as much publicity as possible will, in the mean time, be given to the case, as it will serve the cause of moral soul-freedom. . . . In this case of yours, count on me always as an active friend."

A well-known Liberal writes me from Florence, Mass.:—

"The result of your trial was indeed a surprise to me, and I feel a deep interest in the case. You must see to it that a thorough trial is given on the appeal. I think the discourse upon which you are indicted should be printed in the Investigator, and perhaps other Liberal papers, and an appeal with it for funds to carry the question before the United States Court, if decided against you in the State Court. I shall stand by you for one. Make the appeal, and let the contributions go on. Rely upon my doing something when the money is wanted."

Again: "Make your lecture in the evening [at Florence, May 9] the identical discourse which you gave in Pennsylvania, and for which you are prosecuted."

Wm. McIlwrath writes me from Missouri:—

"I enclose you five dollars, which is not much, but with it goes out my strong desire to see that question taken to the higher courts, where I am confident such a decision would be reversed. You should not be allowed to bear the expense of this prosecution alone."

C. De Roberts writes from Nebraska:—

"I enclose you my draft for eleven dollars, ten for myself and wife, and one for J. M. Hackett. Please send me the papers containing the lecture on which you were convicted."

From Missouri, George M. Houston writes:—

"I have noticed in the Missouri Republican, of 21st, the disgraceful affair at Irwin Station, Pa. It was shameful, and I blush for my native State."

A friend from Illinois writes:—

"This case should go up to the highest court, and the Liberals of the country must feel a common interest in it. A subscription should be started and funds raised, so as to have the case managed with the best ability. Count on my assistance."

A gentleman from Pennsylvania writes:—

"The matter should be presented to the Liberals in such a manner that it may meet with a hearty response. This is undoubtedly a case of pure persecution, growing out of the bigotry and intolerance of Orthodox Christianity; and for this should claim the sympathy and support of the entire Liberal public."

One of the best known Liberals of the West writes me:—

"You must, by all means, carry the Pennsylvania suit to the United States Supreme Court, if possible. It is a matter in which all are interested; and money should be freely contributed to pay the costs of settling the matter in the highest court, that we may know what to expect hereafter."

Geo. F. Bailey writes from Ohio:—

"I am sorry to see you were convicted in the case at Irwin Station. I send you a dollar. I should like to know the name of that bigoted judge that gave the charge to the jury."

From Canada comes a letter, from which I give a paragraph:—

"I did not suppose such a prosecution, with the result, possible in the United States. The case at Irwin Station is as bad as that at Napanee, to the expense of which, I remember, you generously contributed. Your Canadian friends will now have a chance to repay you for your contribution and your appeal in their behalf when they were in need of funds." Respectfully,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

THORNDIKE, Mass., May 6, 1880.
—Investigator, May 19.

JESTINGS.

FOREIGN ladies presented to the Queen do not kiss her hand, but merely courtesy and move off sideways so as not to turn their backs upon royalty.

GLOOMILY the merchant sat looking over the books and through the few remaining papers in the safe the morning after the junior partner had got away to South America with alacrity and $42,000 of the firm's money. A consoling friend says to the merchant: "Ah, well, you'll work out of it all right. There's no great loss without some gain." "True," sighed the man of trade, with a brighter light dawning in his face,—"true, my wife went with him."—Burlington Hawkeye.

THE ARKANSAS FERRYMAN.—An Arkansas Ferryman posted the following notice on a tree: "If ennybody cums here arter liker or to git across the river, they can jes' blow this hear horn, and ef I don't cum, when my Betsey up at the house hears the horn blown, she'll come down and sell them the liker or set them across the river when I'm away from hoam. John Wilson. N.B.—Them that can't read will have to go to the House arter Betsy, 'tain't but half a mile there."

"THE CIRCUS is coming," remarked Mrs. Goodington, laying down her paper, "with no end of trained horses and caramels, hypothernuses and other bedizens of the forest and jungles. How well I remember the first time Daniel took me to the circus! As we entered the tainted enclosure, I said to him, 'How terribly the wild animalcules growl, don't they?' I was eenamost frightened to death till Daniel told me it was only the vendooos of peanuts and prize packages plying their rogation."—Boston Transcript.

MISTRESS (to new arrival, who had been sent to put a letter into the lamp-post box): "Why, Bridget, where have you been all this time?" Bridget: "Where have I been, ma'am? Sure I've been with the lethther, ma'am." Mistress: "I know that; but what kept you so long, and why didn't you put the letter into the box, as I told you?" Bridget (with desperate emphasis): "Why didn't I! Sure enough! Didn't I go to ivery wan o' them, and the doors of wid boxes was all locked, ma'am. I'm kilt intirely wid travellin' round the shtreets all day, so I am."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. OHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.

A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Carlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS, SENT BY MAIL AT PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ADLER (Prof. Felix). Creed and Deed. A Series of Essays published for the Society for Ethical Culture.....	1.50
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women; or, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
Eight Cousins; or, The Aunt-Hill Illustrations.....	1.50
Rose in Bloom. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins.".....	1.50
Under the Lilacs. Illustrated.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
Silver Pitchers and Independence. A Centennial Love Story.....	1.25
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Cupid and Chow-Chow, &c.....	1.00
My Girls, &c.....	1.00
Jimmy's Cruise in the Pinafore, &c.....	1.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD EDWIN (M.A.). The Light of Asia; or, the Great Renunciation: being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Cloth.....	1.00
ARNOLD S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Culture and Anarchy.....	3.00
Last Essays on Church and Religion.....	1.50
Mixed Essays.....	2.00
God and the Bible: a Review of Objectors to "Literature and Dogma.".....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
St. Paul and Protestantism; with an Essay on Puritanism and the Church of England.....	1.75
Isaiah XL-LXV. With the shorter Prophets, all the alloted to it. Arranged and Edited with Notes.....	1.50
French Eton.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Bible Reading for Schools.....	.35
Higher Schools and Universities in Germany. With New Preface.....	2.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.00
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
Lombard Street.....	1.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Moral Science. The Science of the Intellect. Third Edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
Mind and Body.....	1.50
Logic, Deductive and Inductive. 1 vol. Cloth.....	2.00
Emotions and the Will.....	5.00
BARING-GOULD (S.). Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.....	1.25
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BEARD (G. M., M.D.). Stimulants and Narcotics.....	.75
Eating and Drinking.....	.75
The Scientific Basis of Delusions. Paper.....	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete Index. 2 vols.....	4.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. For vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHADWICK (JOHN W.). The Bible of To-Day. Cloth, extra.....	1.50
A Book of Poems.....	1.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Families, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CHILD (LYDIA MARIA). Aspirations of the World. A Chain of Opals.....	1.25
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
CLIFFORD (Wm. K.). Seeing and Thinking. Lectures and Essays. 2 vols.....	7.00
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	1.50
Childhood of Religions.....	1.25
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
The Sacred Anthology.....	2.00
Idols and Ideals.....	1.50
COOPERATION and Conservation of Forces. A Series of Expositions by Grove Holmes, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.

CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Obedience.....	2.80
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Different Forms of Flowers.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man.....	1.50
Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
Insectivorous Plants. Cloth.....	2.00
Habit of Climbing Plants. 1 vol. Cloth.....	1.25
Orchids.....	1.75
Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization.....	2.00
DRAPER (DR. J. WILLIAM). History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. Cloth.....	1.75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols. Illustrated.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Adam Bede, Illustrated.....	1.50
Daniel Deronda. 2 vols.....	3.00
Scenes of Clerical Life and Silas Marner. Illustrated.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series, Portrait.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Speeches.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and other Pieces.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
Letters and Social Aims.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3 vols.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. 2 vols. The Unseen World, and other Essays.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Transcendentalism in New England.....	2.50
Life of Gerrit Smith.....	2.00
Creed and Conduct.....	1.00
Crucifixion of the Christ.....	1.00
Rising and Setting Faith.....	1.00
Visions of the Future.....	1.00
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.25
Sermons. Old Series. 40 numbers, each 10c. 2 vols. half calf.....	5.50
Selections, New Series. 75 numbers, each 2c. Stories from the Lips of a Teacher.....	1.50
Stories of the Patriarchs.....	1.00
Spirit of the New Faith.....	1.00
Safest Creed.....	1.00
Knowledge and Faith.....	1.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol. Elective Affinities.....	1.75
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Life and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Crucifixion of Christendom.....	7.00
GREY (W. R.). Rocks Ahead.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
On the Origin of Animals.....	2.00
Round my House.....	2.00
The Sylvan Year and the Unknown River. The two in one volume.....	2.00
Wendelholme: A Tale of Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	2.00
Modern French Portraits and Biographies.....	2.00
The Life of J. M. W. Turner, R.A. With nine illustrations after the Master's Sketches, and four Woodcuts.....	2.50
Etching and Etchers.....	5.00
Harry Blount. Passages in a Boy's Life on Land and Sea.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Country Living.....	1.50
Gala Days.....	1.50
Wanderings.....	1.50
Summer Rest.....	1.50
A New Atmosphere.....	1.50
Stumbling Blocks.....	1.50
Wool-Gathering.....	1.50
Sermons to the Clergy.....	1.50
Skirmishes and Sketches.....	1.50
First Love is Best.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
I. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
H. H. Bits of Talk about Home Matters.....	1.00
Verbes. Enlarged Edition.....	1.25
The Story of Boon. A Poem. Paper covers Bits of Travel.....	1.25
Bits of Talk in Prose and Verse for Young Folks.....	1.00
Rite of Travel at Home.....	1.50
Nelly's Silver Mine. A Story of Colorado Life. Illustrated.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Adam Smith's Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
American Addresses.....	1.25
Physiography, an Introduction to Study of Nature.....	2.50

INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and other Lectures.....	1.20
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.25
The Mistakes of Moses.....	1.25
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.75
III. Roads. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.50
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
X. Science of Law. By Pietro S. Baccaro.....	1.75
XI. Animal Mechanism. By E. J. Marey.....	1.75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By J. W. Draper, M.D., LL.D.....	1.75
XIII. The Philosophy of Creation, and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt.....	1.50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel.....	2.00
XV. Fundi. By M. C. Cooke, M.A., LL.D.....	1.50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language. By W. D. Whitney.....	1.50
XVII. Money and Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons.....	1.75
XVIII. The Nature of Light. By Dr. Eugene Lommel.....	2.00
XIX. Animal Parasites and Mesmates. By Mrs. Van Couvering.....	1.50
XX. On Fermentations. By Schmittberger.....	1.50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Julius Bernstein.....	1.75
XXII. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. By Pietro S. Baccaro.....	1.50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. N. Lockyer.....	2.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
China.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek in the University.....	8.00
KNAPPET (J.). The Religion of Israel: A Manual. Translated from the Dutch by Richard A. Armstrong.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	3.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. Problems of Life and Mind. Vols. I and II.....	3.00
The Physical Basis of Psychology.....	3.00
The Study of Psychology. 3 Objects, Scope, and Method.....	2.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait, 1 vol.....	2.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
A Noble forerunner.....	1.50
Under the Willows and other Poems.....	1.50
The Vision of Sir Launfal.....	.75
Three Memorial Poems.....	1.25
Fireside Travels.....	1.50
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 5 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
The Ship in the Desert.....	1.50
Songs of Italy.....	1.25
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
Man and Apes.....	1.50
Natural Resemblances and Differences, bearing upon Questions of Affinity and Origin. 1 vol.....	1.50
Lessons from Nature as Manifested in Mind and Matter.....	2.50
Contemporary Evolution. An Essay on some Recent Social Changes.....	1.50
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Vol. IV. Comparative Philology, Mythology, etc., etc.; completing the work. Four vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
On Missions. A Lecture Delivered in Westminster Abbey on Dec. 2, 1873.....	1.00
Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India.....	2.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50

Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson, with an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	.60
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I, and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
Outlines of the Religion and Philosophy of Swedenborg.....	1.25
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.50
Poetic Studies.....	1.50
The Story of Aris.....	1.50
Trotty's Wedding Tour. Illustrated.....	1.50
Sealed Orders, and other Stories.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHUELEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMER.....	1.75
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
5. Geology. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S.....	.50
6. Physiology. By M. Foster, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.....	.50
7. Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S.....	.50
8. Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker.....	.50
9. Logic. By W. S. Jevons.....	.50
10. Inventive Geometry. By Spencer.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols., each.....	1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Status; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, Social, Moral, and Political.....	3.00
Sociology. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
Data of Ethics.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	2.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. New and cheaper Edition. Complete in 1 vol.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	2.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters from Europe.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	3.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	7.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare.....	2.00
West-Easterly Divan of Goethe. Translated.....	1.25
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems.....	2.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N.Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N.Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK, THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

MARSTON'S DINING ROOMS.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY or WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $6.

REASON and REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77. five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM and FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 268 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calf, $6.00.

This edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27th YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
 2. Max Müller.
 3. Emerson.
- For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N.Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest Inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all Inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 546.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1880

{ENTERED AS SECOND}
{CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

GLIMPSES.

LORD HOUGHTON, in the Fortnightly, tells this good anecdote: "In such a house as Lord Ashburton's, at the Grange, Wilberforce was seen at his very best. Memorable were the encounters of humor between him and that brilliant hostess. I have one especially in my mind. 'Mr. Carlyle and I have had a splendid ride over the downs: we went through the mist like Faust and Mephistopheles on the Brocken.' 'Which is which?' asked the lady."

SOCRATES is reported by Plato (Jowett's translation, I., 262) to have made this strong defence of free inquiry: "Some things I have said of which I am not altogether confident. But that we shall be better and braver and less helpless, if we think that we ought to inquire, than we should have been if we indulged in the idle fancy that there was no knowing and no use in searching after what we know not: that is a theme upon which I am ready to fight, in word and deed, to the utmost of my power."

A LONDON letter gives the following highly important intelligence: "Mrs. Gladstone does not confine her attentions to the domestic government of Hawarden Castle. Her influence will be enormous when Mr. Gladstone sits once more on the treasury benches and two of her sons are in Parliament. She is a clever, pleasant, earnest woman, but she dresses badly. Her bonnets are of the dowdiest. The provincial ladies quite resent her bonnets. Gladstone himself is not a 'buck.' He wears trousers that are baggy at the knees. His coats never fit him. His gloves are always too long at the fingers. But, when he goes down to the House of Commons prepared to make an important speech, he is always well brushed, his hair is oiled, and he wears a flower in his button-hole. Mrs. Gladstone always revises him before he leaves home on important occasions. Old members of the Commons straighten their backs and get ready for 'larks' when they see Gladstone come in with his hair smooth and a flower in his coat."

THERE IS GREAT BEAUTY, and truth of profound significance, in this passage from Aloha, the recently published and charming story of a trip to the Sandwich Islands by Rev. George L. Chaney, formerly of Hollis Street Church, Boston: "That evening I lay on a cane-woven couch, in a grove of coco palms, looking up into the sky. Is there any reserve so complete as the utter openness of the heavens? 'Come, look into my heart,' they seem to say; and yet who can say that he knows what is there? I saw the stars dimmed, but not quenched, by the almost dazzling brilliancy of the moon. A giant palm waved its punks over me, and the rustling of its great fan seemed one with the low moan and sighing of the sea. Why must bliss turn to indifference or pain as soon as man is conscious of it? Why cannot I lie still in this perfect hour and on this perfect spot, without a question, a thought even, to break the spell? Stranger yet, why is it, when earth and air and sky and soul agree, and everything seems to favor the mutual revelation,—why is it that nothing comes? I fell sound asleep."

IN MISS COBBE'S recent excellent reminiscences of that good and useful woman, Miss Carpenter, is the following instructive little tale. The institution "semi-miraculously" supported was, of course, that of Mr. George Müller at Bristol. Miss Cobbe says (speaking of Miss Carpenter), "She told me one day of her visit to a celebrated institution, said to be supported semi-miraculously by answers to prayer, in the specific shape of cheques. Miss Carpenter said that she asked the matron (or some other official) whether it was supported by voluntary subscriptions. 'Oh dear, no, madam,' the woman replied: 'do you not know? It is entirely supported by prayer.' 'Oh, indeed?' replied Miss Carpenter. 'I dare say, however, when friends have once been moved to send you money, they continue to do so regularly?'

'Yes, certainly they do.' 'And they mostly send it at the beginning of the year?' 'Yes, yes,—very regularly.' 'Ah, well!' said Miss Carpenter, 'when people send me money for Red Lodge under those circumstances, I enter them in my Reports as Annual Subscribers.'"

THE EXCITED discussion now going on among our Unitarian friends (we use that word "friends" in no perfunctory or formal sense, but in deep-felt cordiality and unalloyed sincerity) leads us to publish this week in full, for the first time, the farewell discourse we delivered to the Unitarian Society in Dover, N.H., March 29, 1868, when we severed forever the cherished tie uniting us to the faith of our fathers; and also the first discourse delivered to the new Independent Society in the same place, April 26. Next week we shall publish the last discourse delivered to the Independent Society, October 4, 1868; and also an extract from the fifty-third volume of the New Hampshire Reports, giving the opinion of the Supreme Court of that State, as pronounced by Judge Sargent, on the essential facts of the law-suit which grew out of these events. These documents give a full and clear sketch of the first organized protest, so far as our knowledge goes, against the "Unitarian boundary," and deserve a most candid and dispassionate examination in their bearings on the present agitation. They mark at least a decisive epoch in our own life and thought, if nothing more; and we yield to the wish to lay before our dear INDEX friends, before we part, the original grounds of a movement which we have spent the best ten years of our life in defending and promoting. Since that day, the movement itself has become strong, and is even now rapidly spreading; and the history of what took place twelve years ago in that little New Hampshire town is an essential part of the history of Free Religion.

THE VINELAND Independent is true to the duty incumbent on the press, when it speaks thus frankly and bravely in its issue of May 27: "Dion Boucicault, the great comedy author, is a social delinquent. This practice of family disunion, domestic infidelity, and general social unfaithfulness is becoming quite prevalent and fashionable among theatrical people, prima donnas, and high-toned actors. Boucicault has, it is said, been practising open adultery, and now his wife sues for a divorce and the custody of her children. It is about time general public sentiment pronounced loudly against these social outrages on the part of public men and women, who seek the applause, the praise, and the patronage of respectable people. The writing of a good comedy cannot atone for the sins against social order which a man commits who openly violates the marriage laws of his country, and libels the family relation by the grossest infidelity. It is a fine example for the rising generation, this social nastiness on the part of public men. Boucicault's young daughters must grow up to womanhood with a poor appreciation of manly character and domestic virtue, when at every turn they are confronted with the fact that despite their father's great talents he is a common adulterer, and a violator of the civil law, say nothing about the thunderings of the Decalogue, and the unwritten moral law of society. Any man who holds the responsible position of a father, who thus lays the heavy burden upon his children of overcoming the taint of his bad name, and who sets them a constant example of evil, is a social monster, who should not be held guiltless by the society he has outraged. If the decent people of the United States in this nineteenth century do not soon frown upon such delinquencies, though committed by the intellectually great, they will find that the virtue upon which the nation and society rests has been so eaten by the filth of disorder and licentiousness that both will crumble to ruin before their face and eyes."

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Ed. of "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tenasly, N.J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX. W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT. C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN AHNES, Monticello.
California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprize.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Ader.
Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTLE, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

Chartered by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
SYRACUSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. O. Andrews.
BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, cuse, N.Y.
GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y. waukee, Ill.
HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.Y.
W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. HOPE WHIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, CHARLES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syra-bany, N.Y.
EBERT TURK, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. N.Y.
E. A. SAWTLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
THOS. DIGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
D. B. MORREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propaganda of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

[For THE INDEX.]

Farewell Discourse

TO THE "FIRST UNITARIAN SOCIETY OF CHRISTIANS IN DOVER, N.H.," MARCH 29, 1868.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

My text this morning is taken from no Hebrew Scriptures, whether of the Old or the New Testament:—America is every whit as sacred as Judea,—God is as near to you and to me as ever he was to Moses, to Jesus, or to Paul. Wherever a human soul is born into the love of truth and high virtue, there is the "Holy Land"; wherever a human soul has uttered its sincere and brave faith in the Divine, and thus bequeathed to us the legacy of inspired words, there is the "Holy Bible." To find my text, therefore, for this last morning of my ministry in Dover, I cannot travel across the Atlantic and the Mediterranean to ransack the Orient for a prophet, nor leap the gulf of eighteen centuries to find a word that shall fit this occasion, to me so earnest and full of moment. I am impelled to turn to some American Scripture, instinct with the deep religion of to-day; I am impelled to listen to some American prophet, whose soul is fired with the divine suggestions and fathomless significance of all human life. This, then, shall be my text, taken from a seer as truly and as highly inspired as any that ever prophesied in days of yore,—I mean, Ralph Waldo Emerson:—

"Nothing is at last sacred but the integrity of your own mind. It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude. The relations of the soul to the Divine Spirit are so pure, that it is profane to seek to interpose helps. Nothing can bring you peace but yourself; nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles."

These words, my friends, so well express the spirit and ideal aim of my ministry, that I have chosen them to introduce this, the last discourse which I shall ever preach to you as your minister. Common custom permits, on such occasions, a free and familiar rehearsal of facts; and I accordingly invite your attention to a general survey of my work among you. It will not, I trust, appear indecorous or egotistic, if I attempt to remove some misapprehensions concerning the manner of my settlement, by stating a few facts which have been forgotten or overlooked.

Early in March, 1864, I preached in this pulpit for the first time. The day was exceedingly stormy, and very few were present. Some little boys upstairs disturbed the afternoon services by whispering and laughing, until I restored quiet by pausing, and requesting "silence in the galleries." There was silence there, at once; and to you who contemplate week after week those great empty spaces, I need hardly add, there has been "silence in the galleries" ever since. The next day was still more boisterous; and, owing to the heavy storm, I spent the whole day in the station and the cars, not reaching Boston till about eight o'clock in the evening. Altogether, my first impressions of Dover were by no means pleasant; and when, a week or two later, I received a very urgent invitation from Mr. Samuel Hale, one of the wardens, to preach here as candidate, my impulse to decline was very strong. The one thing which determined me to accept, was this brief sentence in the letter: "Do come and help us." I had been many months preaching from place to place, and now for the first time I seemed to be really wanted. "If it has come to this," I thought,—"if my help is really needed, I will go anywhere." So I came to Dover, preached four Sundays in April and May, received a call, and was strenuously urged to accept it at once. I did so, supposing that the call was not only in form, but in fact, unanimous. As you all knew at the time, and as I came to know at a later period, this was a mistake; and here, while acquitting all concerned of all blame in simply following a common custom, I must enter a most emphatic protest against the custom itself. It is morally wrong, when a nomination is not unanimous, to pass a vote to call it so, unless all parties understand the vote to be a mere form; in which case the vote is useless. Inexperienced as I was in such matters, I did not suspect the truth, that only a portion of the society desired my settlement; the vote deceived me. Understand me,—I condemn the custom of passing such votes, not those who merely complied with it, intending no deception. If, however, I had not been thus unintentionally deceived, I should never have come to Dover at all.

Thus, on the first of June, 1864, I became your pastor; but the pulpit was supplied by Rev. W. H. Knapp until my ordination, August 31. My ministry really began, therefore, on the first of September, and terminates to-day, covering a period of a little more than three years and a half.

It is the proper place here to correct a misunderstanding of my course in your pulpit, which would in no wise disturb me, if it did not affect my character as a man. The impression existed at the time of my settlement, as I long afterwards learned, that I came to you with what are commonly known as "conservative" views; and when my views were perceived to be "radical," some persons thought, and said that I had not been sincere and plain-spoken in the outset. Forgive me, friends, if I set so much value on my reputation as a sincere and truthful man, as to devote a few moments to the correction of this very unjust judgment.

Three facts seem, so far as I can learn, to have given rise to the impression just mentioned,—the fact that I was recommended to your parish wardens by

Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody, of Cambridge, Rev. Mr. E. E. Hale, of Boston, and others,—the fact that I refused to be examined by the Council at my ordination,—and the fact that my preaching was less radical before my settlement and at the commencement of my ministry than it has been since. Let me very briefly explain these facts, which are perfectly true.

In the first place, I knew nothing of my being recommended by Dr. Peabody or Mr. Hale, until many months after my settlement; nor do I now know precisely for what they recommended me. One thing, however, I do know. With Dr. Peabody I had never exchanged a single word concerning my theological opinions, and, to the best of my remembrance, the same is true of Mr. Hale. Whatever either gentleman may have said about them, I am in no degree responsible for his statements.

In the second place, I refused to be examined by the council at my ordination, and to submit to it any certificate of baptism, church-membership, or graduation at the Theological School, simply because I acknowledge no authority in any ecclesiastical council to require such preliminaries. Many days before the council convened in Dover, I had written to each person invited, stating that I should not submit to any examination by the council, although I would cheerfully answer any inquiries as to my opinions made privately by individual members of it. For myself, I declined to take part in the proceedings of the council, or in any way to recognize it; I looked at it as a mere farce, and, if I had known as much then as I know now, I should have refused to be ordained by a council at all. The time has gone by for ecclesiastical mummery of any sort, at least with me; and the reason of my refusal to be examined by the council was solely disgust at this relic of priestcraft, not at all unwillingness to avow my convictions. In short, I refused to be catechized like a schoolboy before an ecclesiastical examining committee, believing the custom had had its origin in a purpose to repress free thought, and should be abandoned by all liberal societies. But I offered to explain my opinions beforehand to all those invited to assist in the ordination, that no one might feel scruples in taking part in it. That, it seems to me, was very far from being politic and non-committal.

In the third place, while preaching as candidate, I did state plainly my most radical opinions; and any one at all familiar with the questions of the times must have perceived their radical character. With the distinct purpose of making my radicalism known, I preached two sermons, one on the "relations of politics to religion," the other on the "nature of Christ"; and in these I stated as unequivocally as I could my most radical ideas, both in politics and in theology. In the former sermon I used these words with reference to those ministers who had never denounced the sin of slavery,—"God will require the country's blood at the hands of those who see her sin and rebuke it not,"—and added;—"Ministers are men, and must be best respected when known to be manly men. It cannot add to their influence to repress their deep convictions and prophesy only smooth words. Whatever the Spirit of God puts into their mouths, that must be spoken without subtraction or modification." Was that conservative? In like manner, I find in the sermon on the "nature of Christ" statements equally frank. I said plainly,—"I cling most strongly to the belief in his pure humanity. All his wonderful power is the simple product of character." I defended the doctrine that "Christ is a mere man," and said that this doctrine is not a "reproach" to Jesus, but rather "praise and exaltation." Was this conservative? In those statements you have the germ of everything that is radical in theology. The moment a man gives up the absolute Deity of Jesus, he cannot stop till he accepts his mere humanity,—that is, if he can think. Unitarians, I confess, often succeed in stopping halfway; but they do it by ceasing to think. Begin to doubt the "Deity of Christ," and, if your mind is active and strong, you cannot stop doubting till you have doubted yourself out of Christianity into pure Theism. That is where I am to-day,—outside the warm shelter of the Christian Church, in the vast expanse of God's boundless universe, yet still at home! I have but faithfully followed the principles stated with the utmost distinctness in these sermons, which I preached before you gave me a call.

But I should not be honest to leave the matter just here. In these same sermons I find expressions and statements I could not now indorse: they are too "conservative" for me now. That my convictions have ripened and become more clear, coherent, and intense,—that my preaching has become correspondingly more pronounced, definite, and radical,—I certainly must admit. But what does this admission prove? That I did not sincerely avow my radicalism at the start? I think not. It only proves that my radicalism is living and not dead; that I do not count it the highest praise to say of any man, "He is unchanged, like any other fossil." If I had lived among you these three and a half years without any thoughts of my own,—if I had come to you with a theological hand-organ manufactured and guaranteed under the denominational patent, and had been content to turn the crank and grind out the old sectarian tunes,—I should indeed be ashamed to-day. Let me rejoice to confess that I have grown since first I came here; for every man must grow that is not a mummy. Consistency to principle, to the great law of gradual development, is the only consistency I crave. Over the limitless sea of life, who would sail his craft with a cumbersome weight of defensive armor, iron-clad with dogmas ten inches thick? The first tempest would sink the unwieldy mass a thousand fathoms out of sight. No finished system for me, but rather perpetual growth according to law. So far as I have matured my convictions, I have uttered them from this desk; I find little in my earlier discourses to unsay, but very much that I should now say more strongly still. Traces still linger there of merely inherited beliefs; but from the very outset, radical principles are so plainly expressed, that, if misunderstood, the fault must be, not in the lips that spoke, but in the ears that listened. I could not now state those principles more distinctly.

Further, when by appointment I met your committee in Boston after receiving your call, I inquired whether the society here was prevailingly "radical" or "conservative." "Conservative," was the reply. "I wish it understood," said I, "that my sympathies are with the radicals, and that I expect perfect liberty of speech." "Of course," was the answer, "and you are prepared to take the consequences." "Yes," I said, "I always take the consequences of my words." This was the substance of a conversation which I supposed and expected would be made known among you; and hence I took it for granted that my position was understood, until I learned the contrary.

In the course of these three years and a half, I have attended twenty-three funerals, joined eighteen couples in marriage, and made more than one thousand and seven hundred pastoral calls. Under these dry figures, what a world of throbbing life and deep experience lies concealed! The record of a pastor's work cannot be set down in words; it writes itself on the tablets of his heart, never to be erased while memory endures. The most exhausting cares, the most consuming anxieties, the purest pleasures, the keenest pains, the divinest compensations, are connected with this part of the toils of a faithful minister. Not for worlds would I sacrifice the recollections that cluster about my private intercourse with you in your homes. No relation adds more of beauty or of grace to common conversation, than this bond between pastor and parishioner. It may be something, everything, or nothing. I cannot dwell in public on that which is so sacredly private; I cannot here, in the glare of day, even remind you of hours which shroud themselves, as it were, in the sanctity of twilight; I cannot betray your confidence, nor even hint at those experiences which have revealed to me the hidden divineness of human life. No words could overstate the value I place on my pastoral intercourse with some of you, or the sacredness I attach to it. Into your joys and your sorrows I have entered more largely than many of you will ever know; fear of intrusion and respect for the privacy of the human soul have often deterred me from expressing my sympathy, even when strongest and deepest. Too often ministers forget that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread"; and with blundering good-will torture those they would gladly heal. Unless I have felt myself indeed invited into your "holy of holies," I have forbore to cross the threshold with foot profane; and it may be I have seemed forgetful or neglectful, when I have only waited in vain for the signal of invitation. Enough that to my work as your pastor and friend, I look back with the purest satisfaction; for, imperfectly as the work has been done, it has borne great rewards. To those of you who have opened your hearts to me, and suffered me to share your own best life,—to those of you who have let me be a pastor indeed, and met my efforts to help with encouragement and appreciation,—to such, I am sure, I need say no more to express my grateful affection; and to others, I have said too much. I turn to the preacher's work.

As a preacher, I have endeavored, not to propagate opinions, but to awaken thought. Whether you agree with me or not, I care very little; my aim has been to bear faithful testimony to truth as I have seen it, and let my thoughts work as leaven in other minds. To make you think for yourselves, to prize above all things pure spiritual character, and thus lay the foundation of greater excellence in the future, has been my largest and all-including aim. The minister is no priest, speaking with authority; but rather a man who picks up with one hand to give away with the other. Simply as a man among men, divested of all official formalities, and uttering nothing but my own honest convictions, I have tried to fulfil my duty, and be a faithful minister of truth, humanity, and God. Nor, in looking back, do I find much that I would change in my past career. Never have I held back one word of my thought, from fear of consequences; never have I put forth a single word which I did not heartily believe. To speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, has been my aim; and, believing that the truth only is wholesome, I leave consequences to the God whose laws create them. While I have stood here, this pulpit has been free, absolutely free; and in surrendering back to you my charge, I only say, keep it forever unpolluted by a moral slave!

With regard to national questions, I have spoken out betimes,—in fact, sometimes before the people were prepared to believe my word. I remember with especial pleasure two sermons preached before Mr. Lincoln's second election in support of his claims; a sermon delivered on the Sunday after his death; a sermon advocating Negro Suffrage and foreshadowing the Congressional plan of Reconstruction, preached as early as July 2, 1865; a sermon preached February 25, 1866, just after the veto of the Freedman's Bureau Bill and the famous speech from the White House portico, urging open war between Congress and the President, and calling the latter what Charles Sumner afterwards called him, the "direct successor of Jefferson Davis"; also a sermon preached April 13, 1866, in which Mr. Johnson was taxed with direct usurpation, and the most stubborn resistance against it urged on the people. It is with pleasure, also, that I remember having repeatedly advocated impeachment for more than a year back, as the only remedy for the national disgrace and shame. When these sermons were preached, very few approved the measures advocated; but they have all come to pass, with the universal consent of the Republican party. Forgive me, if I take satisfaction in the thought that faith in ideas has proved itself to me so trustworthy a guide.

With regard to questions of theological reform, my preaching has been equally direct. There is now no occasion to recapitulate; if my main drift can be described in a word, it would be this: Self-reliance is God-reliance. To find God in nature and the soul, and to realize him in human life, has been made the true end of religion; and this emancipates from all chains of creed or dogma. Character above everything, and truth next, for their own sake,—he who has learned to love these truly, is master of himself, and so the truest servant of the Indwelling Spirit. But no man can attain this true freedom who still hampers himself with rusty fetters of superstition; and I have not shrunk from the duty of aiming at universal spiritual emancipation. Hence this pulpit has been hated and feared by those who still love their bondage, and from their own point of view nothing is more natural. But the great chariot of Progress must still roll on, whoever is crushed beneath its wheels; the cause of free thought is the cause of humanity, and must prevail over all its foes.

In April, 1865, the New York Convention of Unitarians was held, and by shrewd management the denomination was for the first time saddled with a creed. When the vote on the famous preamble was taken, and the vote declared, a friend at my side exclaimed in exultation, "Now we are a sect!" "Yes," I answered, with a sad heart, "I am sorry for it!" The great reaction against free thought, commenced at New York, was carried out successfully at Syracuse in October, 1866; and the last hope of liberal measures from the Unitarian sect vanished away. Still, I hoped even against hope, and trusted that, when the whole denomination came to realize their false position, they would throw off the fatal policy of repression, and reassert the old idea of spiritual freedom. But all in vain. I feel convinced that henceforth the Unitarians, as a sect, will maintain their stand on what is called "distinctively Christian ground," which, in plain English, means, the Lordship or Messiahship of Jesus. That has become the Unitarian creed, and is working like all other creeds. This fact has greatly influenced my ministry, and at last bids fair to end it. Let me explain my course.

Two interpretations of the word "Christianity" are possible. One makes it mean what the disciples, Paul in especial, built up on the simple teachings of Jesus. In this sense, Paul is the great "Founder of Christianity," and "Christianity" becomes identical with the dogmatic system of the "Christian Church." The other interpretation makes Christianity mean what Jesus himself apparently taught, that is, simple Theism. The Unitarians were fast tending towards this interpretation of the word, when this tendency was suddenly and designedly checked at New York and Syracuse; from which time the Unitarians rank with the other "Christian" sects. As the case, then, now stands, the only denomination which could have cut out the dogmatic element from "Christianity," and given the word a purely spiritual meaning, ceases to occupy the undogmatic ground; and there is no denomination to take its place. What, then, can an individual like me, or a handful of individuals, do, towards fixing the spiritual meaning on the word "Christianity"? Nothing at all. By continuing to accept the titles "Unitarian" and "Christian," we should only stand embarrassed and committed to a false position. The Unitarian creed has destroyed my last hope of seeing the spiritual, undogmatic meaning attached to the name "Christianity"; there is no use in struggling against fate. Except for that ill-omened creed, I might still be a "Unitarian" and a "Christian"; but, as it is, I feel that a high manliness forbids, and I am neither. Understand me, then, I urge you. I drop these names because the Unitarian creed makes it impossible for me any longer to wear them with self-respect.

And so, dear friends, the day of my ministry here with you has drawn to its close. It has been a day of honest work, in which I may take a little honest pride. I believe that my labors have not been wholly wasted. Less than my wish, but larger than my expectation, has been the visible harvest. I have loved the toil, and leave it with regret. In coming years, I believe its results in Dover and elsewhere will still more plainly appear. The "Christian Church" is not large enough for this independent, sturdy, vigorous America. A native religion not fetched from beyond the seas, a religion universalized by the genius of American liberty, must yet supplant the narrow and cramping "Christianity" of the churches, and grow up like the giant pines of California. Faith in God is all that is true in "Christianity," and this is wide-spread as the atmosphere, and indigenous as the grass of the fields. Despite the inevitable sacrifices involved, I rejoice that I have been permitted to do a little humble work in fostering this native growth of our own clime and time. Other and better workmen will take my place, but in the greatness of the work we shall all live, and be one forever.

But I have talked too long. The sad word that I do not want to say, will be no longer cheated of its utterance, and comes at last. I look into your faces, and cannot speak the blessing I would bequeath. For the last time, must I call you "my people,"—for the last time! This old church, which, in all these years, I could never pass without a swelling in my heart and an inward prayer for diviner illuminations of love and truth,—this old pulpit, hallowed to me by so many an earnest word spoken to you and to the Viewless One,—these old pews, associated forever with the forms and faces of friends that have become part of myself,—the old organ that has joined us in many a reverent hymn,—to all, a long farewell! And you, who have listened to me, some with assent, some with dissent, but all, I trust, with friendly goodwill,—you, who have come nearest to me, and proved your faithful love by countless acts of ever-watchful kindness,—farewell, farewell! May the spirit of God fill your hearts and lives with tranquillity, joy, and truth, and endlessly increase the measure of your happiness! Once more, to each and all, to young and old, a most affectionate farewell!

[FOR THE INDEX.]

FIRST DISCOURSE

TO THE INDEPENDENT SOCIETY OF DOVER, N.H., IN AMERICAN HALL, APRIL 26, 1868.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

"And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred; but new wine must be put into new bottles."—MARK II., 22.

These words, full of wisdom as of courage, are reported to have been said by Jesus, the most ultra of all radicals, the most uncompromising of all come-outers. He began his public course, apparently, with great respect for the established church of his nation, declaring that he came not to destroy, but to fulfil, the law of Moses. His first aim was to reform the faith of his ancestors, to put life into dead ideas, to pour the new wine of Christianity into the old bottle of Judaism. But experience soon showed the uselessness of this. He was soon compelled, either to break with the past, or be faithless to the present; and so we find him eating with the hardest characters, neglecting the fasts held sacred by the pious, and trampling under foot the Sabbath laws of the Jews. In fact, those who try to make men observe Sunday nowadays, as a Sabbath, quite forget that Jesus, both by profession and practice, was a most notorious Sabbath-breaker. I admire the intrepid reformer who kept bad company to make it good, and disregarded bad laws to supply their place with better. But, of course, every respectable conservative, every prim and sanctimonious Pharisee, was struck aghast at such impiety. "How dares this man discard the ancient customs of his forefathers, violate their laws, and throw contempt on their religion?" "Because," answers the clear voice of Jesus, "new wine requires new bottles,—new ideas require new institutions,—new faith requires new forms."

Here, friends, lies the reason of our presence in this hall to-night. The age is fermenting with new ideas, and demands new organizations to express them in social form. The new wine is bursting the old bottles, and new ones must be found, or the wine will be spilled. The Christian Church, venerable with years and festooned with the luxuriant ivy of sacred associations, shows ominous cracks from base to pinnacle, and stands rather as a gray monument of the past than a habitable home for the faith of to-day. How ill at ease is the spirit of these modern times under the stern restraints of mediæval theology! The stir and activity of advancing civilization, the vast conceptions and discoveries of triumphant science, the amazing increase of industry and commerce, the intense earnestness of society in the development of its own resources, the equally intense earnestness of the individual in the pursuit of his own aggrandizement, foster a spiritual restlessness which makes religion more than ever a felt human need, and yet makes the decorous stagnation of the churches more than ever incompetent to supply this need. The hungry soul asks for bread, and receives a stone. The church creeds are clashing at every point with the established truths of modern science; the church forms are out of all harmony with the real spirit of modern society. Instead of being an institution fitted to develop human nature to its true stature, and promote human welfare in all possible ways, the Christian Church is little better than a business corporation conducted on the mutual principle, in which all the members take more or less stock, and from which each member, on payment of the regular premium, receives a policy of insurance against all risks by fire in the next world. To the honor of human nature be it spoken, this sanctification of utter selfishness finds less and less support from intelligent men. The world is outgrowing its period of childish credulity and helpless dependence on the church; from the vast masses of the people comes a low murmur as of distant thunder, and the practised ear detects the demand for purer truth and a nobler religion. For purer truth and a nobler religion, I repeat; let no one be so blind as not to see that it is the absence of these which has caused this deep and growing discontent with the Christian Church. Out of the great heart of humanity comes this mighty cry for something higher and better. The spirit of the age, bold and free as it is, is most reverent, most earnest, most loyal to the truth it sees, and most eager to see still more; it has, I believe, despite all its sceptical doubts, a deeper faith in spiritual things than ever yet prevailed in any age gone by. The daily increasing indifference to the church is, I believe, not owing to retrogression, but to progress; humanity asks more and more earnestly for the truth of God, but by bitter experience is learning less and less to look for it from the Christian Church. Now, as in the time of Jesus, it becomes plain that reform is impossible, and that exit is the only course. Now, as then, the new wine must be put into new bottles.

The movement which has resulted in our meeting here to-night as an Independent Society, comes, as I am most profoundly persuaded, out of no mean spite, no contemptible wrangling, no common or vulgar dissension about petty trifles in the administration of affairs. Towards those whom we have left, I think I speak for you, and I know I speak for myself, when I say, that we have no sentiments whatever but of sincere good-will. I should scorn to be a party in any parish quarrel, or lower my self-respect by encouraging for any purpose a "tempest in a teapot." No, friends, I mean to act like a man; not like an animal-cule; and from all that I have heard, I believe that all concerned in the launching of our enterprise have been as much above small or mean motives, as I hope I have been myself. Still less do I believe that this movement has had its origin in mere friendship for me, which would be an insufficient reason for the sundering of old and strong ties. Believe me, I could not allow myself to be so misled, as to view your action as having no deeper cause than simple attachment to an individual. Grateful as I am for this proof of your respect, I am fully conscious that you accord it to me purely as the custodian of a great principle,—that you follow me only as the army follows the standard-bearer, both of us alike being under orders from on high. Were it not for this faith I cherish, that what you have done has been done out of intelligent fealty to the great idea of spiritual freedom, I could not consent to stand here as an open schismatic,—as a separator of those who have equally used me with kindness. But because I believe that simple fidelity to freedom has brought us both here to-night, you as listeners and me as speaker, I rejoice in our gathering as one of the most significant events of the times,—small in itself, but vast in its spiritual relations. It prophesies the coming day, the dawning of a better religion than that which now usurps the name. To me your movement, wholly spontaneous as it was, appears the most distinct, emphatic, unmistakable protest yet uttered against Christian superstition,—the most frank and unconditional enlistment yet made in the great cause of spiritual freedom. Its moral power must be immense, as widespread as beneficial; and although we must expect opposition, vigorous and determined (I care not how vigorous, provided it be fair), you will more and more clearly see what a mighty blow you have struck here to-night for human liberty and human progress. It requires no prophet's eye, but only a wise reading of effects in their causes, to enable us to foresee the profound influence which our enterprise, if well sustained, must ultimately wield. In the name of humanity and truth, aye, and of God, I congratulate you, my friends, on the bold stand you have taken. You have not feared to do what Jesus did,—to break away from the "Church of Christ," as he broke away from the Church of Moses; and in so doing, you have, like him, taken this great step purely on the responsibility of your own conscience and reason. Say what they may, the world will be permanently the better for the act.

Every thoughtful person will ask himself: "What is the meaning of this new organization? What is the new wine for which this new bottle is required? Why have these men and women found it incumbent upon them to make so earnest a protest against even that form of Christianity which calls itself Liberal?"

Having been appointed by you to address you from week to week,—being, so to speak, a "committee of one" elected to report to you on spiritual matters, which report you will accept or reject according to your individual judgment,—it apparently devolves upon me to find some distinct answer to these questions. This duty I cannot discharge without direct reference to my own course among you; but, as no man can feel more deeply than I that individuals have lasting value to the world only so far as they illustrate the practical working of great principles, I trust you will acquit me of unseemly egotism. In proportion as human conduct is inspired and guided by great ideas, it becomes of importance to others,—in fact, concerns the race. Whoever guides himself by principle, and makes his own life the exponent of universal truths, illuminates the world. But the illumination is no fitful flashing of human pyrotechnics; it is rather the calm, constant, starlike outshining of the God within. The power of any man's word or life must be traced out of sight beneath his individual existence into the fathomless abyss of the Divine; and whoever feels this truth, and dares to apply it to himself, will comprehend how impossible is vanity to any serious soul.

For three years and a half, I was the minister of the Unitarian Society in this place. When, on account of discontent with a freedom of thought and speech which was held to be incompatible with denominational limits, I found myself obliged to resign, the question came home to me at once: "On what terms can I honestly settle again?" Reflection soon convinced me that I ought to leave, not only the Unitarian denomination, but also the Christian Church,—that I ought to make my protest against Christianity itself, especially that milk-and-water dilution of it known as Liberal Christianity,—and that my voluntary dropping of the Unitarian and Christian names would mean nothing, unless it meant a firm resolve to stand henceforth outside of all Unitarian and Christian organizations. The names practically belong to the organizations, and to the world at large must represent whatever ideas the organizations please to make them represent. Individuals who, dissenting from the ideas thus expressed, attempt to attach different ideas to the old names, fail of their end, and only succeed in deceiving themselves and others. Although, consequently, to come out from the Christian Church seemed tantamount to giving up the profession for which I had with great difficulty prepared myself, no other course was open to me, if I was in earnest; and accordingly I announced my resolve at once from my pulpit. Some persons, among them some of my best friends, have thought my course morbid and over-scrupulous, regarding names as of no moment, and saying I ought to be content with the liberty of proclaiming the truth itself irrespective of names. But this verdict springs from loose thinking. The step I felt called upon to take was not a mere shifting of epithets, but a practical departure from the venerable Christian Church, the only organization in Christendom which could give opportunity for the profession which I had chosen. The only complete protest, then, was to make the discarding of old names signify the final rupture of old relationships. It must be evident to you all, that this was the only consistent, logical, and unmistakable course to pursue. Consequently, I have been obliged to decline several invitations to preach as candidate, although coupled with tempting pecuniary offers and promises of perfect freedom of speech, simply because they were made by Christian organizations. I mention this fact reluctantly, to explain my dealings with yourselves, and to show that, in refusing to connect myself again in any way with the Unitarian Society here, I have been led by principle and not caprice.

To my great surprise, a movement sprang up spontaneously, immediately after the delivery of my farewell discourse, to sustain me here in Dover in the stand I had thus publicly assumed, outside of the Christian Church. At one time there seemed to be some danger of my being invited to remain as preacher to the Unitarian Society, through an imperfect comprehension of the ground I really occupied. But, as you doubtless remember, I stated to you plainly that I could only stay in Dover as minister to an Independent Society, unconnected with any sect, and uncommitted to Christianity itself. If, therefore, I was to remain with my former society, the name must be changed. "The name," I said, as you all remember, "is the flag. I could not fight the battle of the Union under the Confederate flag; neither can I fight the battle of free thought under a sectarian flag." If to any of you this requisition on my part has appeared to be an arbitrary and unreasonable infringement on your liberty, let me say that I felt inwardly constrained to make my public position so unambiguous, unequivocal, and plain that no one could mistake it,—and that I was as free to fix according to my own conscience the conditions on which I would remain, as you were free either to accept these conditions or to let me go. Be very sure, I respect your liberty as I do my own; and time, I believe, will confirm, not only the justice, but also the wisdom, of our course.

Here, then, you have met to-night, on a basis absolutely free, as an Independent Society, to which I have engaged to preach for the ensuing year. The Society as such stands untrammelled by any dogmatic name, being pledged only to perfect spiritual liberty; but for this very reason, the individual members of it are free to continue their old relationships or form new ones, if they please. No one is obliged to renounce any name, as a condition of fellowship with us; to require that would be as arbitrary as to impose one. The principle we defend is the right of each man to think, speak, and act for himself, with perfect freedom.

You have established this Society that there may be at least one place in America, in New Hampshire, in Dover, where liberal ideas shall find free, public, and logically consistent expression, and have thus entered a most emphatic protest against that narrow, timid, repressive policy which the Christian Church, even though styling itself Liberal, everywhere adopts. We have severed ourselves from all Unitarian and Christian connections, because the spirit of the age, which everywhere else is active in the direction of larger liberty, has at last produced even in Dover the mighty fermentation of new ideas, and because we mean to put the new wine into new bottles. The Christian Church cannot adapt itself to the wants of modern times; and, as the floods of ignorance subside, it must be left high and dry, like Noah's Ark in Jewish mythology. What we need is an institution free, hospitable, progressive, democratic, philanthropic, religious—in short, anything except ecclesiastical. All that I can do to make this new association a moral, intellectual, social, and religious power, I shall do with energy and earnestness,—not as a priest or clergyman, but as a young man in hearty sympathy with the fresh, free spirit of these stirring times,—not as a stiff official or solemn functionary, but simply as one of the people themselves, intent only on imparting what I have to give of moral and spiritual truth. I commit you to no specific opinions; you commit me to none. A free platform, at least, open for the speaking of all truth, you have here established; but I hope your movement will not end here. An active association which shall take up the work neglected by the Christian Church, and aim at the practical good of man here on earth, instead of trying to save him from a fancied hell hereafter,—an agency which shall unite the free efforts of all for the welfare of each,—a centre of beneficent activities and influences for the promotion of human progress in all directions,—such, I hope, will be the ripper development of our enterprise. Here we plant ourselves frankly on the ideas of to-day, and welcome every accession of new truth, whether in thought or life. Born of the living present, we are heirs of the mighty future; and, if we are faithful to our opportunities, the past shall be bettered in our hands. Religion, in its largest and deepest sense as the universal development of mankind into the divine likeness, the unfolding of all human powers in all directions, and their consecration to high and noble ends,—that be the object of our Independent Society! This faith in man as a being of boundless possibilities and of priceless value is the great American idea,—the great inspiration and living force in American civilization; is it not appropriate that our new movement, devoted as it is to the practical embodiment of this noble American idea in social form, should be inaugurated in "AMERICAN HALL"? I love America only as America loves humanity; but I do in my soul believe that to-night our "American Hall" foreshadows the American Church, the Church of Humanity, the Church of the People, which shall have no end but the elevation, education, and benediction of all mankind. Whatever the form, or variety of forms, into which the new spirit shall enter,—whatever the nature of the organizations which shall furnish channels to the new life of reconstructed America,—sure I am that transformation of FAITH IN CHRISTIANITY into FAITH IN HUMANITY is the key-note of the next thousand years. On that faith in Humanity, as the cornerstone of Religion, let us build as bravely and as wisely as we have begun!

THEODORE PARKER.

Twenty-two years ago, forty persons met at Park Street Church in this city, on Saturday afternoon, in the height of the great revival of 1858, "to pray for the conversion of the notorious infidel, Theodore Parker." One prayed, "O Lord, we know that we cannot argue him down, and the more we say against him the more will the people flock after him, and the more will they love and revere him"; another begged his brethren "to pray for Mr. Parker every day when the clock should strike one"; and at that meeting prayers were offered for no other person—besides Theodore Parker. The next morning three thousand people in Music Hall listened to a man whose religion was joy and light, and whose "soul dwelt therein, like an eagle amid the fields of the upper air." The antagonism of that day was an antagonism of twenty years' growth. Like Chalmers and Channing, Theodore Parker felt from boyhood that he must be a minister. It was born in him; and, when he was ordained in the summer of 1837 at West Roxbury, the prayer of the person whose hand lay on his head was "that no fondness for literature or science and no favorite studies may ever lead this young man from learning the true religion and preaching it for the salvation of mankind." One of the Cambridge professors, anticipating his career, advised him to be a "minister-at-large," preaching with the voice and with the pen; but this was easier said than done. No sooner did he begin what was really his life-work than all the great social forces of America were arrayed against him, the forces of the market and the State, not less than those of the church and the press. He lived in a seething time, when great changes were taking place in the moral and social life of the country. His famous sermon on "The Transient and Permanent in Christianity" did for free thought in America in 1841 what Cardinal Newman has stated that John Keble's significant sermon at Oxford on "The National Apostasy" did for historical Christianity in England in 1833. Newman and Parker are wide enough apart as leaders in religious thought; but Parker was not less positive for the absolute truths of natural religion in Boston than Newman was at Oxford in stating anew the ancient faith. Newman was not less persecuted in England than Parker was here. The movements which they represented were simultaneous, if divergent, and, from a larger point of view, had essentially the same end,—the bringing of men to God along the lines of positive truth. To-day, when the dust and smoke of conflict have cleared off, Parker is not the infidel the Park Street revivalists imagined him to be, and the movement initiated by Keble and Newman to bring the Church back to the earlier standard of belief and practice has been a healthy process in awakening religious thought and life. The transcendental movement in New England and the tractarian movement at Oxford were only different manifestations of the same restless energy in human thought; and the receptive mind of Parker, himself the disciple of Channing, was moulded, like the restless mind of Newman, himself the pupil of Keble, by influences greater and wider than he knew.

To-day, the twentieth anniversary of Theodore Parker's death, the great moral and social crisis in which his voice rang out clarion notes above the fray is over. The old war-horses in religion and politics have disappeared; and the questions for which they battled are settled, and recorded as a part of yesterday's history. The passions that environed Parker, that attempted to shut him out from influence upon his fellow-men, that reduced him finally to his own pulpit and to the lecture field,—passions so hot that even their memory to-day is like the blast of a furnace,—have essentially subsided, and broader and better views prevail. The men that held the keys of power in his day have been reduced to their natural size, and Parker now stands forth as one of the bravest and truest sons whom New England has yet honored with growing fame. In 1860, it was chiefly his fighting qualities that were thought of and insisted upon in his biography. In 1880, his true work in the social and religious life of his time rises more and more into view. Dean Stanley saw the scholarly side of his work, when he recently spoke of him as the principal scientific religious thinker in New England during the first half of the century; and it is now generally conceded that we once had among us a man socially proscribed, personally hated, thoroughly misunderstood by the conventional representatives of religion, denied the proper recognition of his great and generous service to humanity while he lived, whom no one excelled in reverence, in piety, in manly courage, in devotion to great principles, in fidelity to religious truth, in the conception of a minister's duty to all classes and conditions of men, in the union of those qualities of head and heart which, found in a man of the people, and used for the people, finally gave him the transcendent joy that he had not lived in vain. Lying on his death-bed in Florence, Parker said: "I had great powers committed to me. I have but half-used them." And yet he had put fifty years into the work of a quarter of a century, and had fought battles, stood for unwelcome truths, and dared and braved, excepting Garrison, more than any other public man of his time. As seen from the point of to-day, he changed the idea in New England of what a minister ought to be. Channing led the way in asserting the supremacy of moral and spiritual truth above the dogmas of Calvinism; but Parker never forgot that over his study-door rested the musket with which his grandfather at Lexington had "fired the shot heard round the world." He was a man of war from his youth, living in the thick heat of the fight up to the day when, with bleeding lungs and trembling heart, he wrote a sad farewell to people into whose souls he had breathed the principles of his own life. No man ever carried into a Boston pulpit, after Channing, such power of stating the relation of religion to life. He lifted the great seething multitudes into his own atmosphere of thought and feeling. He taught the preachers of the rising generation what and how to preach; and thousands of young men, careless of his special religious opinions, were inspired to noble and manly living by his words and by the character behind the words. He lived a great and open life among us. Its bare record is thrilling; but the life yet unwritten, known to few, transmitted from lip to lip, the personal life which he once said, with tears, could not be told even by himself, the story of what he suffered, of the men who betrayed him, of his inward conflicts of heart, of the heroism of a brave and silent suffering soul, of the man who never faltered when duty called, reveals Theodore Parker as one of the few rare persons who, whether in public or private life, fills out the idea of a truly religious man. It is time to study his career anew, but his old parishioners and followers are not the only ones interested in his fame. Even now he is one of the bright and shining names in our calendar of great men, whose career is growing into clearer light as an index of New England character? It is high time that men of differing faiths should cast aside the prejudices of a quarter of a century, and give Theodore Parker his rightful place as one of the great students, and one of the great social, political, and religious leaders of our time. He was to the casual eye a destroyer of current shams wherever and whatever they might be; but he was also one of the most positive, constructive, upbuilding, and renewing men who have ever taught and lived for what is best in American life. —Boston Herald, May 9.

CHESTNUT STREET CLUB.

FIFTEEN YEARS IN THE HISTORY OF THE CLUB.—RECORD OF THE PRESENT SEASON.—YESTERDAY'S CONVERSATION BY PROFESSOR BENJAMIN PEIRCE.—THE AFTER-TALK.

The May meeting of the Chestnut Street Club, yesterday forenoon, in the parlors of Mrs. Sargent, was the last for the season of 1879-80, and completed fifteen years in the history of the club. For a few years after its organization, it was known as the Radical Club; but of late, under the name of the Chestnut Street Club, it has flourished under the same auspices as before, become known in this country and abroad, and has numbered among its lecturers distinguished literary and scientific writers. In its early days, among those who shared its discussions and delivered its lectures were prominent men in the anti-slavery agitation, such as Sumner, Garrison, and Phillips, with whom should be mentioned the late Mr. Sargent and the Rev. Dr. Bartol. Professor Tyndall has lectured in these parlors, also Mr. Thomas Hughes and M. Coquerel. Dom Pedro has been a guest; and the poets of the time, Longfellow, Holmes, Whittier, and others, have also been in the companies which have filled the parlors on the forenoon of the third Monday of every month during the cool season. During the first season after the Radical Club was formed, its meetings were held alternately at Dr. Bartol's and at Mrs. Sargent's; but ever afterward they have been, as a rule, at No. 13 Chestnut Street. As a memorial of the fifteen years of the life of the club, a volume is in preparation for publication in the fall, which will outline the club's history and furnish enough of each lecture which has been given to set before the reader a correct idea of what has been said and done at these gatherings.

During the season which has just closed, lectures have been given by Professor Benjamin Peirce upon "Ideality in Science," by Professor E. M. Morse upon what he saw and heard in Japan, by the Rev. Dr. Frederic H. Hedge upon the different schools of ethics, by Professor John Fiske upon "The Language of the Future," by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe upon "Representation," by Dr. C. C. Everett upon "The Philosophy of the Comic," by Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes upon Jonathan Edwards and his theology, and by Professor Peirce (yesterday) upon "The Impossible in Mathematics." Dr. Bartol presided at yesterday's gathering; and Professor Peirce spoke almost entirely without notes, taking as his general subject the limitations to number and the advance into a new sphere of mathematical knowledge which seems to be at hand from the development of the science of quaternions. The mathematical student, he said, meets problems which cannot at the time be solved, but which afterward are found to have in them more ideality than was suspected; they have their place in science, which is often important, though not known at the time they were discovered. Two classes of mathematical observations may be noted, the direct and the indirect. Addition and multiplication were given as instances of the former, and subtraction and division of the latter. Professor Peirce mentioned the advance which has been made in the human conception of negative quantities, from the time when each case of a subtrahend larger than a minuend was made a distinct statement by itself, to the time when they were all covered by the statement of a general principle. Incidentally, to show how quickly the human mind reaches its limit in conception of number, Professor Peirce mentioned the African tribe, to whom everything above five is infinity, and remarked upon the characteristic lack of superlatives in the language of great thinkers, and the frequent use of extravagant expressions by those who have no standard of thought. In one part of his lecture, the professor said that he did not regard the introduction of the decimal system of so much moment as is commonly thought. No scientific instrument has been constructed based on that system: the natural way of thinking in fractions is by halves, quarters, and so on. It is doubtful whether the American system of reckoning money is any more convenient than the English. The latter part of the lecture was upon the advance in mathematical knowledge made possible by the discovery of the science of quaternions. The algebra of quaternions is only an algebra which meets all the phenomena of spaces, and solves them all. Most of the older definitions of mathematics are too narrow to include quality, which is covered by quaternions as well as quantity. A new definition of mathematics was given by Professor Peirce as follows: "Mathematics is the science which draws necessary conclusions."—a definition, he said, wider than the ordinary definitions. It is subjective: they are objective. This will include knowledge in all lines of research. Under this definition, mathematics applies to every mode of inquiry.

Dr. Holmes began the conversation, and sparked as usual. He had once tried to compute, he said, the relative advantages on either side of the old problem of destiny. Suppose a period of time so long that it would be measured by the time it would take for the whole earth, if it was made up of grains of sand, to be wholly removed by carrying off one grain in a thousand years, to be compared with the time which comes after it without limit, would a man gain most happiness by choosing to enjoy himself in the first period and be miserable in the second, or by selecting to be miserable in the first and happy in the second? The doctor found by count under a microscope that about a hundred sands made a linear inch, or that there were a million in a cubic inch; but he did not remember the exact number of years in the first period. Professor G. H. Hewison was the other chief speaker; and Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney found a parallel between the ideality found in mathematical truths and the deeper meaning in religious truths. Dr. Bartol, the Rev. M. J. Savage, and Professor Landseer of the Institute of Technology also took the rôle of questioners, Professor Peirce replying in a running conversation. —Advertiser, May 18.

SCENE IN A COUNTRY CHURCH.—A strange and indecorous scene was witnessed in Penwortham Parish Church, near Preston, on Sunday afternoon last. The circumstances which led to the affair were these. A short time ago a person bought some property, and a pew in the church formed part of the estate. This pew had been tenanted by another family for about twenty years, and the year's rental expired about a fortnight ago; but they were unwilling to give up. Some uneasiness transpired on this account a week ago; but on Sunday last matters were brought to a climax. The pew was early occupied by the new owners, and when one of the family of the old tenants, a young man, made his appearance, he found the pew-door fastened against him. Unable to obtain admission, he climbed over into the pew, and seizing one of the occupants, another young man, attempted to eject him by force. The rest of the congregation were naturally scandalized at this conduct, and it was not until the vicar went and interfered that the disturbance was put an end to. The man who had caused the disturbance then left the church.

Poetry.

WORK.

Work! it is thy highest mission;
Work! all blessing centres there;
Work for culture, for the vision
Of the true, the good, the fair.

'Tis of knowledge thee condition,
Opening still new fields beyond;
'Tis of thought the full fruition;
'Tis of love the perfect bond.

Work! by labor comes the unsealing
Of the thoughts that in thee burn,
Comes in action the revealing
Of the truths thou hast to learn.

Work! in helping, loving union,
With thy brethren of mankind;
With the foremost hold communion,
Succor those who toil behind.

For true work can never perish;
And thy followers in the way
For thy works thy name shall cherish.
Work! while it is called to-day.

F. M. WHITE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 5.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

G. Goge, $1.50; F. H. Guivits, $1; Jno. W. Sullings, $3.20; W. P. Wesselhoef, $3.20; John Howes, $6.40; Cash, $2.55; John Adams, $3.20; H. R. Russell, 45 cents; Joseph Whitney, $3.20; Lewis Hunt, $3.20; F. H. Lothrop, $2.40; N. F. Griswold, 50 cents; W. L. Taylor, $3.20; Hon. Adin Thayer, $3.20; W. C. Little, $3.20; William Linney, $2.20; Dr. D. Ayers, $5; Emerson Bentley, 50 cents; S. Milliken, 10 cents; William Smith, $3.20; James McGrath, 45 cents; Walter C. Wright, $1; Horace Hunt, $3.20; William Wick-ersham, $1.25; Mrs. G. R. Russell, $3.20; H. W. Johnson, $4; Geo. M. Olcott, $3.10; William Hogan, $3.20; W. H. Boughton, $3.20; M. S. Fecheimer, $3.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 10, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FEY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Law of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases: i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

THE UNCONSCIOUS BREACH

BETWEEN MODERN SCIENCE AND MODERN PHILOSOPHY, AND HOW TO HEAL IT.

Professor Fowler, of Oxford, in the Introduction to his excellent new edition of Bacon's Novum Organum, says: "Bacon assumes the ordinary distinction of mind and matter, an universe of objects to be known and a thinking subject capable, with due care and discipline, of attaining to a knowledge of them, without apparently troubling himself as to the ulterior questions, what is knowledge, how can I become conscious of that which is not myself, and what are the ultimate meaning and relation of the two terms in this comparison."

Although Lord Bacon, justly considered, was little more than a popularizer of the method of experimental inquiry which is often called by his name, the merely empirical dualism attributed to him by Professor Fowler has been, and is, the fundamental philosophical position occupied by modern science. The astronomers, the physicists, the geologists, the zoologists, the physiologists,—in short, all the great investigators and teachers of science, so far as they are scientific men and not philosophers,—simply take for granted the existence of an external objective world, independent of the percipient or cognizant mind, and proceed at once to study its phenomena and laws as ultimate facts. The ground they take is essentially that of the so-called "common sense"; they devote no time to metaphysical subtleties of any sort, for which, indeed, they not infrequently feel contempt; they not only assume the existence of an external world, but also its essential intelligibility, as a permanent reality whose relations can be discovered, verified, and formulated. In taking this position, they are in truth more solidly and impreguably fortified than they themselves are perhaps aware. The objectivity of the cosmos they explore is to them a "working hypothesis" only; they would perhaps concede the reasonableness of those very doubts respecting the existence of an external world which, nevertheless, by a happy instinct, they dismiss without examination. When, however, they are called upon to vindicate the validity of their position, they have a right to claim that their "working hypothesis" of an objective cosmos has been abundantly verified by experience, and converted by verification into a demonstrated theory. The verification of any hypothesis must consist in its ability to account for all the facts; and the hypothesis of an independent external world is the only one into which all the facts of human experience will exactly fit. Modern science, therefore, by its practice at least, has planted itself immovably on the objectivity of the cosmos, as a "working hypothesis" long since triumphantly verified and now transformed into a demonstrated theory.

The case is quite otherwise with modern philosophy. If any one characteristic feature can be found which is common to nearly all philosophical speculations of the present day, it would seem to be a marked tendency to the Berkeleyan idealism. This tendency is shared by both the dominant schools, the a priori and the a posteriori, and in an equal degree, although neither school carries out this Berkeleyan tendency to its logical ultimate in "solipsism"—the doctrine that the individual thinker alone exists. Widely as these two schools diverge, they both substantially agree that, in the last analysis, all knowledge is phenomenal merely, and that all phenomena are nothing but states of consciousness; they both deny, consequently, that a noumenal or intelligible cosmos, objectively existent and independent of the mind, can be affirmed to exist at all—or at least can be affirmed to exist as an object within the scope of our own cognitive faculties. The inevitable corollary from these premises is that the world as science knows it is nothing but a magic-lantern show within the limits of the individual consciousness, and that science itself reveals nothing but the order in which the individual's subjective sensations succeed each other. We do not in the least exaggerate this matter. Professor Clifford, a brilliant genius too early dead, and at the same time a speculative thinker whose philosophy bewitched his science, declares explicitly that "matter is a mental picture in which mind-stuff is the thing represented"; and he sings a solo which is echoed in chorus by all modern subjectivists. "The objective order, quid order," he says, "is treated by physical science, which investigates the uniform relations of objects in space and time. Here the word object (or phenomenon) is taken merely to mean a group of my feelings, which persists as a group in a certain manner; for I am considering only the objective order of my feelings. The object, then, is a set of changes in my consciousness, and not anything out of it." Professor Bain similarly says: "The totality of our mental life is made up of two kinds of consciousness—the Object consciousness and the Subject consciousness. The first is our external world, our non-ego; the second is our ego, or mind proper."—"We are incapable even of discussing the existence of an independent material world; the very act is a contradiction."—"The sum of all consciousness is the sum of all existences." John Stuart Mill takes the same ground: "Of the outward world we know and can know absolutely nothing except the sensations which we experience from it." Even G. H. Lewes and Herbert Spencer, both of whom try hard to rescue some remnants of objectivity from the general flood of subjectivism, logically fail. Says Lewes, in spite of his "Reasoned Realism": "The starting-point is always Feeling, and Feeling is the final goal and test." Spencer fares no better. On the one hand he defines life as the "continuous adjustment of internal to external relations," which would certainly seem to imply the existence and recognition of an intelligible outward universe; and this implication is incontrovertibly contained in his general theory of the evolution of mind out of an external environment. Yet, on the other hand, he frustrates most effectually his own attempt to vindicate some intelligible objectivity for the cosmos by reducing it to an "unknown something," and even more plainly still by echoing the general assumption of the English school that all experience consists ultimately of "sensations." "In sensation," he says, "consciousness is occupied with certain affections of the organism. In perception, consciousness is occupied with the relations among those affections." Sensations are primary undecomposable states of consciousness; while perceptions are secondary decomposable states, consisting of changes from one primary state to another." In fact, the entire English experiential school is hopelessly aground on the shoals of idealistic subjectivism.

But the tendency to idealism inherent in the excessive subjectivity of modern philosophy is even more marked in the great Kantian school, of which Fichte's absolute egoism is the only logical outcome. When the cry in Germany is "Retreat upon Kant!" and when in this country the influence of the great thinker of Königsberg is visibly greater than ever, it is timely to quote from Lange's History of Materialism a passage which clearly and sufficiently points out the inevitable drift of the Critical Philosophy. "Not less 'paradoxical,'" he says, "must it appear to the sluggish mind of man, when Kant lightly and certainly overturns our collective experience, with all the historical and exact sciences, by the simple assumption that our notions do not regulate themselves according to things, but things according to our notions. It follows immediately from this that the objects of experience altogether are only our objects; that the whole objective world is, in a word, not absolute objectivity, but only objectivity for man and any similarly organized beings; while, behind the phenomenal world, the absolute nature of things, the 'thing-in-itself,' is veiled in impenetrable darkness."

Both the great schools of modern philosophy are thus plunged in a subjectivism which is the total negation of objective science, yet from which neither of the two is able to extricate itself. They both plant themselves upon the Kantian principle that things conform themselves to our cognitions; while all experimental science, by its great law of verification, plants itself upon the principle that our cognitions must conform themselves to things. Modern philosophy, beginning with the subject alone, cannot help ending with the subject alone,—that is, in idealism. Modern science, if it is permanently to begin with the object alone, cannot help ending with the object alone,—that is, in materialism. Both science and philosophy suffer greatly from the unnatural and indeed almost unconscious estrangement which results from their fundamental contrariety of method and foundation. Is there no way out of the hobble?

We believe there is. But the remedy cannot be found till the disease is fully understood. What is the origin of the serious misunderstanding so much to be deplored?

Briefly, in the wrong answers given to the great question of universals, which for hundreds of years absorbed the attention of philosophers in the Middle Ages. Realism, deriving its origin both from the Platonic theory of Ideas, and from the Aristotelian theory of Essential Forms, defended the objectivity

SPECIAL DONATIONS AND MEMBERSHIP FEES

IN RESPONSE TO RECENT CIRCULAR OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In order to put the plan of work, stated in the circular, into operation, the Executive Committee of the Association have decided that at least $2,000 should be secured. But to insure the success of the experiment beyond a single year, a much larger sum is desired: $5,000 will not be too much.

Acknowledged May 27.....	$2,310.00
Mrs. L. B. SAYLES, Killingly, Conn.....	5.00
D. H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.....	2.00
A. P. WARE, Andover, Mass.....	5.00
FRED. LOESER, Brooklyn, N. Y.....	10.00
WALTER C. WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.....	5.00

Total.....$2,337.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F.R.A.

of species and genus, but converted them into entities or the essence of entities. Nominalism, detecting this error, went to the other extreme, and denied their objectivity altogether, converting them into mere thoughts (concepts), or even into mere words. In this momentous struggle, Nominalism won the victory, and, under the more moderate form of Conceptualism, holds undisputed sway to-day; its error, quite as grave as that of Realism, remains undetected even now. What was the consequence? This—that genus and species, which in truth are relations of resemblance among objective things, and therefore, since relations are inseparable from their terms, just as objective as they, were reduced to merely subjective concepts, without any objective validity at all. By this fatal misconception the external world was wholly stripped of its intelligibility; relations, which are the proper objects of the intellect, vanished from the sphere of outward reality altogether, and were permitted to exist only as thoughts; classification, which is the soul of science, became possible only in the world of ideas, no longer in that of things; and all knowledge of things shrank necessarily to sensations alone, which, being mere affections of the subject, are exclusively subjective in character. Here is the root of that subjectivism, which, as we have seen, pervades equally the two great modern schools of philosophy; here is the root of that unnatural restriction of experience to mere sensations which is the common foundation of both these schools. So long as the Nominalistic or Conceptualistic view of genus and species prevails, just so long is philosophy doomed to a barren and dreary subjectivism.

Modern science, on the contrary, from the very start, escaped this blighting error; it impatiently waived aside all the philosophers, and entered boldly into the path of experimental discovery, assuming without philosophical warrant that the classifications it established were objectively valid. And science was right. In its practical and purely empirical procedure, it acted on a sounder philosophy, albeit in unconsciousness of it, than that of the philosophers themselves. All the truth of the natural laws it has discovered rests absolutely on the truth of the principle that genus and species, and all other relations, are just as much objective realities as are things themselves; the objectivity of relations is the broadest, profoundest, and most magnificent of all scientific generalizations, and it has been verified even to superfluity by its proved capacity to explain the facts of the universe. But science herself is unconscious of the philosophic treasure she actually possesses, while philosophy has not yet learned even of its existence. Here and there, as in George Henry Lewes and in Ueberweg the historian, may be found adumbrations or anticipations of the truth; yet nowhere has it, so far as our knowledge goes, ever yet been fully or adequately developed. In this most important principle of the objectivity of relations, opposed as it is to the traditions of both the modern schools, lies the great gold-field of the philosophy of the future; and many a rich nugget awaits the bold explorers who shall rush to work it. The prize is well worth the winning; for by its winning alone can the false subjective method of modern philosophy be reformed, the sound but unphilosophized objective method of modern science be justified, and the intellectual-consciousness of the world, now divided against itself to the equal detriment of science and philosophy, be restored to unity and to peace.

THE CHIEF END OF MAN.

Finding himself in this world without wish, act, or responsibility of his own, a man's first natural inquiry so soon as he attains the reflective age is, "Why was I created, and what is my duty?" To this self-questioning there are as many answers as there are temperaments.

The Stoics, Cynics, and Epicureans of old anticipated replies given nowadays by modern schools of thought under different nomenclature. The utilitarians oppose the pietists, as the positivists the Presbyterians.

Sardanapalus condensed the practical philosophy that animates the lives of too many millions nowadays in those words Lord Byron puts into his inscription upon the two cities erected in one day: "Eat, drink, and love; the rest's not worth a fillip." But, on the other extreme, we may quote the sole greeting of the melancholy monks of La Trappe,—"Frère, il faut mourir"—as remaining to this day the key-note to many uncowed lives. Wm. Rounseville Alger has, perhaps, made as close an approximation to the golden mean, in latter-day philosophy, of living as any other modern guide, when he names as the supreme duty of life the "fruition of function"; that is to say, the perfecting of our characters by the highest possible development of our mental, moral, and physical capacities. Education, culture, the acquisition of the benefits bequeathed to us by past ages, as a means to the duties of life, are everywhere recognized as invaluable, as also the possession of perfect health, that our bodies may respond to the minds which dominate and inspire them; but beyond this what? These are but the preparations; and, to even those not wholly engrossed in the oftentimes difficult task of bread-winning, there must be proposed an inducement to all the exertion implied in the trained intellect and skilful body. Auguste Comte taught that this inducement is to be found in a natural impulse, latent within most individuals, to assist humanity to progress still farther upon the road to happiness; but, while it cannot be doubted that this impulse is strong enough with many unselfish souls, yet history proves it has never sufficed with the masses of the people, for long at a time, to restrain them from degrading vices and ultimate retrogression, when once it comes to be relied upon exclusively, or even mainly, to the subordination of that religious government, which includes threatened penalties for evil-doing as well as glorious promises for abstinence from selfish sins.

The old English maxim may be held to include in detail the summing up of Confucian philosophy upon this subject, when it recites a man's whole duty as being "to get a boy, write a book, and plant a tree." Poor Richard himself could not have placed the ordinary duties of life in plainer or terser language, easy to be understood and acted upon by "common-sense" mortals, who share the ordinary ambition of leaving posterity, embalming their individual ideas, and beautifying to some extent the land they love. Perhaps it would be as well to adhere to this rule as any other; enlarging it only so far as to have it well understood that our duty is first to ourselves, next to our families, and last, but not least, to society in general. By precept and example, by the tone of our thoughts not less than by the habits of our lives, we are always moulding the careers of others about us, albeit unconsciously for the most part; and that man who deliberately places pleasure in the place of duty, or the woman who selects the butterfly rather than the bee as an exemplar, has much to answer for beside mere loss of time. If our first duty be to ourselves, it is only in the sense of those noble words of Polonius to Laertes,—"To thine own self be true; And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man." The Christian's idea is essentially a selfish one in proposing to himself only so to live as to avoid the wrath of an offended Deity; nor can it be held one whit superior to that of the Mohammedan who hopes to earn a future harem in Paradise by prostrating himself toward Mecca and eschewing liquor.

To leave the world better and happier than we found it,—to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, or to clear the ground from noxious weeds and make it fit for the grass to grow; to plant trees, dig wells, found hospitals, inculcate charity, patience, humility, with the hope of the devout Buddhist of earning Nirvana, and peace and rest at last,—is as high a destiny as can be indicated in these restless, eager, unscrupulous times, when the ambition that animates the great majority of mankind is simply to earn the legal right to possess many times more than one's fair proportion of the good things of earth. First, to teach ourselves how to live so as to do the most good; next to find our special vocation, in which we may hope to excel; then to secure the modest means which are essential to the support of a family, and, selecting some congenial partner, welcome peaceful obscurity as the most fitting preparation for eternity, whether it be the Christian's Heaven or the Buddhist's melting back into the universe of matter,—is quite as much as it is possible for the average man to perform in his lifetime; and those exceptional natures, born to have honors thrust upon them, will still be guided by their instincts toward what is good and best for them, nor is their lot one usually to be envied by ordinary mortals. To escape from the turmoil and unrest of an existence in which only material interests are considered should be the grand object of desire; to purify our hearts and lives by abstinence, rather than indulgence of our appetites and passions, the means; and to leave this world without regret, but carrying with us the affection, respect, and sympathetic appreciation of our fellow-creatures, at once the perfect achievement and reward of "a well-spent life."

A. W. K.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

HORACE MAYNARD, the newly appointed Postmaster-General, is a native of Massachusetts.

THE JEWISH SCULPTOR, GULDENSTEIN, of Stuttgart, has received from the Emperor of Austria the gold cross of merit.

MISS HARRIET HOSMER contemplates visiting America, when she has completed some work at present upon her hands.

THE MARQUIS OF LORNE declines the invitation to Boston, to attend the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its settlement, next September.

MARK TWAIN says that he can't write in a "fixed-up" room. When he needs inspiration, he takes his paper and pens, and retires to an unfurnished room in his stable.

BANCROFT, the historian, is tall, thin, and a little stooped. His head is small, long, and thin; but his eyes are youthful, and his mouth expressive of great decision of character.

PROFESSOR PROCTOR thinks America an excellent field for scientific men. During his last visit, he delivered 136 lectures, the gross receipts of which amounted to $50,000; his winter's work making him a clear profit of $15,000. Under these circumstances, he approves of the American attitude toward science.

IT WILL BE gratifying intelligence to many to know that Mrs. Parker, widow of Theodore Parker, who was severely injured some months since, though still obliged to depend somewhat upon a crutch in getting about, has very nearly recovered from the effects of the accident. Mrs. Parker is now in the sixty-sixth year of her age.

THESE CHEERING WORDS have recently come over the waters from Italy: "I am happy to say that my health is much better than it was; in fact, it is as good as it ever will be. With my pen I can still do something for the cause I have had so near my heart so many years. Desiring still to be considered one of the fellow-workers in behalf of soul-freedom, I am cordially, as always, yours, O. B. FROTHINGHAM."

PRESIDENT ELIOT declared at the Unitarian Festival, last week, that Unitarianism is without a creed. Is it? The experience of more than a score of its ministers during the last twelve or fifteen years led them to quite a different conclusion. The President numbered Theodore Parker among the famous Unitarian divines of the past. There seems something rather amusing in this persistent counting of Parker among the distinguished representatives of Unitarianism, when it is remembered how zealously he was discarded by Unitarians while living.

IN HIS ADDRESS before the Discharged Convict Society, Anniversary week, Rev. Edward E. Hale paid this tribute to the warden of the State Prison of Joliet, Illinois. It is of value as showing what sort of warden it is possible to have over a State prison, in a State where nothing is in the rules, and where they still try to "get the best": "We were joined by the warden whom I had met for the first time at supper. Although one hears only favorable reports of Major Robert McClaughrey, I was not prepared to meet so unusual a person. He at once impresses one as a man of great firmness, combined with real gentleness. At one time a college professor, he still bears the air of the scholar and of one accustomed to think before speaking. All reckless bravado is restrained by his presence, and yet the most diffident man, alone with him, would have confidence to say what he truly felt. Nature, education, and life have fitted him to fill with honor the highest position where integrity, clear-sightedness, and a regard for all human rights are required. 'There goes a perfect gentleman,' said one of the prisoners, as the warden passed us; and that was but an expression of the almost universal feeling among those in the durance vile."

NEW YORK appears to enjoy a monopoly of its proscription of the Jews. The latest instance of this sort well illustrates the utterly absurd and coarse nature of the spirit of such outrage, if indeed any new evidence of the kind were needed. The person singled out for the vicarious insult this time turns out not to have been a Jew at all, but an accomplished and highly respected lady of a distinguished American family. It is true that she was the wife of an eminent Hebrew physician of New York, and bore his name. But this incidental circumstance was deemed sufficient to debar Mrs. Mary Putnam Jacobi from St. Mark's Hotel, Staten Island, a few days since, by its enterprising and fastidious proprietor. As Mrs. Jacobi simply desired temporary accommodation for herself and children, the sole objection of this sensitive innkeeper to her appears to have been that she bore a Jewish name. It would be interesting to know how far this kind of thing is likely to be carried. There are a good many of us who bear one or the other Jewish name, when it comes to that. Are we in danger of similar proscription when we visit the fashionable watering-places about New York? Would it not be well for us to determine this before turning our steps that way or too confidently trusting their proffered hospitality?

MR. DANIEL H. BOND, whose death occurred at Florence, Mass., last week, though a man of unusually retiring character, was a person of notable qualities and intelligence. He belonged to a family that traced its genealogy back to William Bond, who settled at Watertown, Mass., in 1630. Mr. Bond passed his early life in Canterbury, Conn., and was earnestly identified with some of the abolition events which transpired in that vicinity some forty years ago. He was an intimate friend of the Burleighs of Canterbury, of which family the late Charles Burleigh was so prominent a member. Upon the death of his wife, some eighteen years since, Mr. Bond moved, with his children, to Florence, where he continued to reside up to the time of his decease. His children have all been conspicuous for the intellectual cast of their minds and influence in the community. Among them are District Attorney D. W. Bond; H. H. Bond, Esq., the law partner of the preceding, and husband of Mrs. Elizabeth Powell Bond, formerly resident speaker of the Free Congregational Society of Florence; George W. Bond, tack manufacturer; and Mary W. Bond, for some years principal of the Florence schools, now treasurer of its Savings Bank. Mr. Bond was very pronounced in his religious views, though little disposed to controversy, or to intrude them upon others. He was a constant reader of THE INDEX, and in common with his children warmly devoted to the Cosmian Hall Society.

PUCK HAD the following "little say" about Col. Ingersoll last week: "Mr. Robert Ingersoll has been lecturing again on his disbelief in revealed religion. We have no objection to Mr. Ingersoll's believing or disbelieving anything he pleases. His arguments are strong and, in many instances, unanswerable, and he may be right in all he says. At the same time there is nothing new or strikingly original in his remarks. He says only what numbers of nobler and greater minds before him said in a much better way. Paine, Voltaire, Buckle, Spencer, Huxley, and Darwin have circulated their opinions quite as freely, but more decently than Mr. Ingersoll. It is noble to teach truth and to battle against falsehood and fable; but Mr. Ingersoll is no martyr to the cause. He takes special care to charge a very good price for admission. He's not going to give the public atheism and materialism for nothing,—not much he isn't. If he did, he might be entitled to a little more respect. But the business he has undertaken savors of the Street-Cleaning Bureau. Some people have to be scavengers, for the health of others; but it is not a nice business. And it is a question if Mr. Ingersoll does not do more harm than good in lecturing in a flippant manner to a lot of half-educated people, unsettling their beliefs, and, in many instances, corrupting their minds. Materialism, morality, and ethics must go hand in hand. The ignorant labor under the delusion that they have nothing in common."

FOREIGN.

AT DUBLIN the other day, a tract distributor was sentenced to pay a fine of £1, with the alternative of fourteen days' imprisonment, for the offence of handing a tract in the street to a Roman Catholic clergyman, inviting him to a polemical discussion.

TURKEY.—A Constantinople despatch tells of horrible sufferings of the starving people at and near Mossoul. Their sufferings are indescribable. Finding no cereals, some eat corpses, and become ill in consequence. Most of them are dying, as they have nothing to eat. An identical note from the Great Powers will, in a few days, summon the Porte to settle the Greek, Armenian, and Montenegrin questions.

IT IS NO uncommon thing in the west of London to meet a lady on a tricycle. The tricycle is becoming to athletic girls all that the bicycle is to athletic young men. It is not so rapid, of course; but it is much safer, and for that reason is sometimes preferred even by bicyclists for an extended tour. A tricycle club, partly composed of ladies, has already been formed at Kensington, and the fashion having been set is being greatly followed. The British public views the whirling wheels and their mover with some astonishment, but at the same time with infinite toleration. The new ladies' exercise is, in one sense, more public than rinking, but it is safer in some respects.

THE VEGETARIAN SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the Vegetarian Society of England was held at Cambridge not long since under the presidency of Professor Newman. There was a conference and banquet in the guildhall in the afternoon, and a public meeting, which was presided over by the mayor of the borough, in the evening. Many members of the university attended the banquet. The public meeting was addressed by Professor Newman, Mr. Axon (Manchester), Rev. W. Bennett Hayward, Mr. F. Baker (Wokingham), Rev. J. W. Monk (Doddington, Kent), Rev. James Clarke (Salford), Rev. C. H. Collins (Wirksworth, Derbyshire). Vegetarianism has recently gained many converts in Cambridge, particularly in the university.

THE ROMANISTS are prouder of nothing than their restoration of St. Ethelreda's in Ely-place. The last church which ceased to be Roman at the time of the Reformation, it is the first to return to the hands of the Roman communion. The Duke of Norfolk timely found the relic of Ethelreda to be placed under the altar, and it is carried round in procession at all high festivals. He gave a window,—a very fine one, too,—which cost him £2,000, and lights up the chancel. Other windows are now being put in. The crypt is in constant use, and is well furnished. A few years ago, this building resembled a huge barn with a dark vault. It is now in a fair way to become one of the handsomest churches in London. An old font, probably Norman, which has been dug up from the ruins and restored, is itself worth going to see.—Liverpool Mercury.

THE LEINSTER Express says: "A rumor to the effect that 'apparitions' similar to those witnessed at Knock have been seen in the Roman Catholic chapel, Ballyfinne, about four miles from Mayborough, has created quite a sensation in the Queen's County for the past week. Crowds flock nightly to the locality, and the seers are most positive that the visions are of a divine or supernatural character. From a personal visit to the place, we may state for the information of our readers that the apparitions are nothing more than passing shadows reflected on the altar by the rays from the setting sun, which those whose imagination is stronger than their reason resolve into saintly figures. On Friday evening, the curiosity of the people seemed even greater than before, for the roads converging on Ballyfinne were lined with pedestrians of all ranks, and vehicles of every size, form, and color.

THE Weekly Times indulges in these reflections in respect to the recent elections: "The policy of Lord Beaconsfield has failed in some of the most important directions; but it is not for failure that the people have decided upon his dismissal from power. It is because they believe his wars have been without justification upon moral grounds, and therefore criminal enterprises. For the same reason of its opposition to right, they condemn his support of the ill-doing Turk, and his neglect of the victims suffering from his misrule. The British people 'who come from below,' and also those from above, despise the sham glory of Disraelitish Imperialism, and they care very much that their country's influence, and, when needful, its power, should be exerted in the promotion of liberty and civilization. Beyond this, they do not believe that a policy can be expedient, if it is morally wrong. After all, what is defeated is, as Lord Hartington says, not so much the Tory party as the personal policy of Lord Beaconsfield, to whose misguidance they have implicitly submitted."

LOCAL OPTION IN SCOTLAND.—The Earl of Zetland, who has a feudal right as proprietor of Grange-mouth to close all the places for the sale of intoxicants in that port, has left the decision as to the liquor traffic to the inhabitants themselves. Six of the police commissioners, as representatives of the rate-payers, forwarded a memorial requesting his lordship to allow matters to remain as they are. A few days before, however, a memorial was forwarded to Lord Zetland by the chief magistrates, signed by 1,374 individuals of all classes, from sixteen years of age and upwards, including all the clergymen of the town, and at least four-fifths of the householders and parents. These memorialists stated that in their opinion the proposed prohibition would "tend greatly to advance the welfare of the town, and add very much to the comfort and peace of the community." Lord Zetland has decided to be guided by the expressed wish of the bulk of the inhabitants, and in about a fortnight the public will have an opportunity of watching the operation of a local option prohibitory law in a British seaport.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE comments in the Secular Review on Mr. Bradlaugh's refusal to take the oath of admission to Parliament as follows: "Any care taken to attain consistency between the thing believed and the thing said is a public advantage. There are persons in the House of Commons whose throats must have a furrow in them, occasioned by the multitude of false oaths they have swallowed; and the more those who profess freethought keep clear of this, the better. There are difficulties enough in any one of the declarations which have to be made by members, even in an affirmative form, which might make many men pause before taking it; but we shall hear more of this hereafter. In the mean time, the committee who have been appointed to consider Mr. Bradlaugh's request to make a Quaker declaration will probably report against it, as the construction now sought to be put upon it is one which has never yet been adopted. If Mr. Bradlaugh wanted to establish the precedent of using it, his course was not to challenge all the scruples of the House beforehand, but to have gone to the table when a Quaker member went up, and proceeded to make the same declaration, leaving it to the clerk at the table to raise objections if he thought fit; and probably nothing would have occurred, or, if any action had been taken by others, Mr. Bradlaugh could not have been accused of obtruding his private opinions upon the notice of the House. If he had found no oath upon the table which he could take, it would then have been obligatory upon him to have said so; but, as he found a form to which it seems he could subscribe, there was no necessity for saying anything."

EDUCATIONAL PRESSURE.—A largely attended meeting in connection with the Social Science Association was held on Monday night at the Caledonian hotel, Mr. Joseph Brown, Q.C., in the chair, when Mrs. Garrett Anderson, M.D., read a paper on "Educational Pressure." Declining to express any opinion on boys' schools, and confining her remarks to the methods of education adopted in secondary schools for girls, Mrs. Garrett Anderson urged the following practical points as a remedy for the complaints made as to overwork in such schools: 1. To get the elements of knowledge well and thoroughly taught at an early age, and not to urge the child to make up for early neglect by taking a very extensive range of subjects as soon as she goes to a good school; 2. To accept two and a half or three hours of class work as long enough at one time for almost all children, and to provide two or three short intervals of rest—e.g., five or ten minutes in each hour—during even this time; 3. To insist upon every girls' school having a playground; 4. To aim at greatly reducing the amount of writing in the home work; 5. To reduce the number of examinations, and especially to make them as unstimulating as possible, and to apply them with great reserve to the children most likely to shine in them; 6. Not to aim at completing the education by the age of eighteen. The main purpose of Girton and Newnham colleges is to encourage young women to continue their education in an organized manner after they cease to need the restraints imposed upon school-girls, and the existence of these colleges renders it more than ever unnecessary to attempt to teach girls everything they ought to know in early adolescence. An interesting discussion followed the reading of the paper.

Communications.

THE CHAINEY CASE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your remarks upon the Chainey matter, it seems to me you miss the point in the case. For all I can see, your arguments would be equally valid if Mr. Chainey had turned Catholic and read mass in the church at Evansville, or if he devoted himself to preaching free love or soft money. There must be a line drawn somewhere, and it seems to me it is at the word church. The Unitarian Association does not undertake to support philosophical societies or debating clubs, but churches; and, however broadly we may define the word "church," I think nobody would use it for an association in which the "clergyman" declares prayer to be "a hideous mockery," and advises his people to sell their hymn-books for old paper.

I am connected with a church which is largely supported by the Unitarian Association, and there has never been the slightest indication of a desire to control the free expression of opinion. Our minister has expressed decidedly rationalistic views, and most of his society agree with him; but we have old-fashioned Unitarians and Universalists among us, and we work harmoniously together, because we are agreed that our main work should be religious and ethical, rather than speculative. The object of a church is to help make the world better; and this will never be accomplished by the purely negative discussions of Bob Ingersoll, to which it would appear that Mr. Chainey intends to devote himself. These are all very well in their way,—indeed, if properly conducted, indispensable; and perhaps he will find himself more at home in this work than in the other. But I do not think he can reasonably complain if the Unitarian Association refuses to contribute money to keep up what is to all intents and purposes a lecture course, without even the pretence of a religious character or of church work.

W. F. ALLEN.

MADISON, Wis., May 26, 1880.

[Prof. Allen does not appreciate the point we made, and unconsciously confirms it. The "church" in all forms requires "prayer," and prayer implies a creed. It is Mr. Chainey's denial of this creed that is making all the trouble; and Unitarianism ought to confess the existence of this creed as the boundary of its own fellowship. Belief in God and in Christ is the universal creed of Christianity; the Unitarians all profess to be Christians, and they are punishing Mr. Chainey for denying this creed of Christianity, which is theirs too. By and by the fog will clear away, and the studied confusion will disappear.—Ed.]

THOUGHTS ON TEACHERS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

On looking over the History of Russia, I notice some laws with regard to retired or disabled school-teachers, which I think ought to be duly considered in this country; and accordingly I will give you an extract of the school law, beginning with a short statement about officers of the schools:—

"Like all the institutions for the dissemination of knowledge in the Russian Empire, the university is placed under the protection of the minister of public instruction. The curator is the chief superintendent of the university, and is generally a nobleman of high rank. According to the rank of public honors, ordinary professors are of the seventh class; extraordinary professors, adjuncts, and those made doctors by the university, of the eighth class; masters, of the ninth; and candidates, of the twelfth. The rector, so long as in office, is of the fifth class. Every professor or adjunct who has, absque reprehensione, performed his duty during twenty-five years, obtains the title Emeritus, and, if he wishes to resign his situation, his salary is continued till the end of his days, whether he remain in Russia or not. If a professor, adjunct, or teacher labor under any incurable disease which incapacitates him for duty, he receives the half of his annual stipend; if he has been singularly useful to the university, he may, however, claim the whole salary. The widows and children of professors, adjuncts, and teachers, receive one annual stipend of the deceased. They also demand a pension, which is regulated by the length and utility of the service of the defunct to a fifth or a fourth of the stipend. If he serve less than five years, the salary is given only once, unless his singular merit be evident, when a gratification is given. If the widow marries, the pension is paid to the children, either until the youngest reach twenty-one years of age, or, if females, only till their marriage; if males, only till they be fixed in some public office."

This extract from Robert Lyall's History of Russia shows a feature in their system of education which it would be well for the public in the United States to consider. I mean that part which provides for the retirement of teachers in our public schools, after serving a term of years, or when they, while in the service, become afflicted with a disease disqualifying them for duty, and which provides for the families of the men in the service. There are many cases of hardship in this country for the want of some such needful regulation as this; and, wherever hardships exist in a profession, it takes away so much of the inducement for the ablest and best-fitted persons to embark in it. Those who would be the most efficient teachers seek pursuits which promise more certain support for themselves and families in the future.

I knew one case in Waltham. A very worthy young lady entered the school service, and continued for some fifteen years, at the end of which time, from too constant application, her eyes gave out; and she was advised that, if she did not leave her work for a season, until her health could be restored, she would lose her eyes altogether. In accordance with this advice, she asked leave of absence from the school for a few weeks for the recovery of her health, if such a thing was possible; yet when pay-day came, although it was very evident to all that her health broke down on account of the excessive work too long persevered in, and although she had an aged mother to provide for, she could not recover a single cent for the few weeks of her compelled absence.

In passing through different parts of the United States, almost everywhere I have found worn-out teachers, whose health would no longer admit of their following the vocation of their choice, and who were obliged to work at something for which they had no taste or preparation, and at very low wages, eking out the last years of their existence with the scantiest subsistence, often being necessitated to labor under the most trying circumstances when their miserable health was constantly demanding rest and recreation.

Now it is clear, to any one who will reflect, that such a state of things should not be. When I was in Washington some time since, I was glad to find some of these worn-out female teachers employed by the United States Government at very fair wages; yet there was a host of others who sought such employment who could not obtain it, and were obliged, at a late age, to shift as they best could for subsistence.

Now, if the State should regard this matter in a purely economic light, leaving the question of humanity out altogether, the only question is how to get the best service at the lowest cost. To realize this, we cannot put school-teaching in competition with the lowest grades of labor, as they used to do in the West and South two or three generations back, when the fathers of the children would say, "We can get a man to split rails, or dig ditches, or cut wood for ten dollars per month; and school-teaching is not so hard as these, and therefore the teacher should be satisfied with eight dollars per month." This system uniformly reduced the qualification of the teachers (natural and acquired) to its lowest terms, as of course any one with requisite qualifications to teach could get better compensation elsewhere; so that it is evident that in teaching, as in every other vocation or profession requiring talent, knowledge, and culture, and the art and genius for teaching, there must be inducement held out to those possessing the needed qualities at least equal to what they can get elsewhere, or they will go elsewhere. It is human nature to follow one's interest; and it would be an immense aid to the inducement, after the best of one's life had been spent in the service, to have provision made for the remaining years of life.

Some years since, I attended a meeting of the Board of Trade in the city of Worcester, where the subject of the evening's discussion was mainly on teaching. One professor, while speaking on this subject, remarked on the vast difference in different teachers in the power they had over the scholars, while in everything else they appeared equal. The one possessing this rare gift seemed to have that about him which so stimulated the scholars to activity that, with the very dullest, diligence became choice; all appeared in his presence to have an augmentation of mental power, and they would seem to catch the idea at once of the great value of learning and culture, and imbibe the love of knowledge for its own sake. Yet this something, which could not be discovered by any examination of the teacher, and could not be explained, was indispensable. Go where you will in countries where popular education prevails, you will now and then find among teachers one possessing this wonderful endowment, and always you find such a one a master in his profession, while the others about him are but servants.

Now, although I have seen in books many accounts of teachers endowed by nature with that peculiar combination of faculties rendering them eminently successful, and heard them spoken of in lectures, yet I never saw or heard their characteristics explained, or an explanation attempted. I will therefore give a few thoughts on this interesting topic, in which I shall endeavor to explain, in a measure, this mysterious power with which teachers are sometimes so happily endowed.

The first essential to it is a finely constituted imaginative power, well trained and cultured, by which the possessor can put himself in the student's place, think with his thoughts, feel with his emotions, sympathize with his desires and aspirations, perceive at every step in his student's progress his limitations of thought and of mental power, in order that he may never weary him by teaching what he already knows, or tax him too severely by urging upon him problems beyond his comprehension or his previous acquirement. The imaginative power of the teacher should make him at all times aware of the bodily and mental strength of the student, and his capacity of endurance without injury to his powers in any respect; so that study shall become a wholesome mental gymnastics, giving at the same time a constant gain of knowledge, breadth of thought, and mental power. The imaginative character of the teacher should enable him to sympathize with the physical needs of his student as to exercise, so as not to allow any of the vigor of his health to be sacrificed.

It is wonderful, indeed, to see how the imaginative power of the teacher, properly exercised, will create an endearment and confidence between the student and the teacher, making the teacher constantly delight in his work, making the student rejoice at each step in his progress; while a warm and sincere fellowship grows up between them, the teacher making the student feel all along as though they were on the same plane of knowledge. By this happy fellowship (which could not exist in any considerable degree without a large imaginative power), the work of the student becomes light; so that often it happens that twice the mental labor may be performed without any injury or hardship to the student, while at the same time his ardor for knowledge and his mental power are healthfully growing.

Next to imagination is enthusiasm. When a man feels a strong, passionate desire constantly stirring within him, and an abiding love and delight in the pursuit of an object, feels himself to be elevated and ennobled by the vocation, puts forth his soul's best efforts and endowments, and feels that other things are all cheap compared with the purpose of his pursuit, and when he has at the same time an undoubting faith that the purpose of his pursuit can be accomplished, then his love and faith are of that character which can remove mountains. All these qualities make an enthusiasm which can accomplish more than the purse or the sword; at any rate, can accomplish what the purse and the sword cannot accomplish. They throw a charm over all the work, making that glorious which would otherwise be dark and forbidding, and make that joyous which would otherwise be a dull task. This enthusiasm will make the cold marble glow with a new beauty and smile like an angel. It enabled Watt to ponder, puzzle, and persevere over a little bit of organized mechanism unto its completion; and he thereby made all the civilized world his debtor.

Observe also what wonders in these modern times have been brought forth in every direction by enthusiasm in research, and at the bottom of all of it is the enthusiastic teacher. He it is that bends and shapes the twig that makes the great tree. Yes, the teacher must be an enthusiast to reach his greatest efficiency.

Next, the teacher should be a natural rhetorician; that is, he should have a natural tact for making every thing which he undertakes to teach perfectly clear to the comprehension of the student. Clear, distinct enunciation should be made the constant habit of the teacher. Then the state of mind, the knowledge of language, the mental culture and power of the student must be considered; and then the teacher must put his propositions in such language that the student cannot misunderstand. To illustrate this, I will relate a story of Abraham Lincoln.

When Lincoln was in the New England States the first time on a political campaign, he found a large audience wherever he spoke, and they all appeared to listen to him with a remarkable interest and attention. After he had spoken six or eight times, he was one day overtaken as he was riding along the road by a Professor of Rhetoric of Harvard College; and, after some conversation, the professor asked Lincoln what books on rhetoric he had read, remarking that he had followed him (Lincoln) several days to observe the perfect rhetoric which he displayed in all his speeches, and that he had never heard a public speaker, or a professor in his addresses in the colleges, who displayed so perfect a knowledge of rhetoric. Lincoln was taken by surprise, and said: "Rhetoric! Rhetoric! I never read a book or looked into a book on rhetoric." The professor insisted that he must in some way have studied rhetoric, and asked Lincoln to think over, and see if he could not remember some time in his life having applied himself to the subject. After a few minutes of reflection, Lincoln said that often in his boyhood he had listened to his neighbors talking with his father. Nothing vexed him so much as when a man related a thing in such language that he could not comprehend it; and when he went to bed, after hearing such an ambiguous narration, he never went to sleep until he had worked out the meaning of his ambiguous neighbor, and also applied words to the same thing which could not be misunderstood. This method of selecting words to express his ideas so that they might appear to the listener perfectly comprehensible and clear became a fixed habit with him. This selection of language with a view to clearness, added to his distinct enunciation, always loud enough to be heard in any part of the hall, constituted his rhetoric, to which he unconsciously applied himself in his boyhood. It made him a master in rhetoric, and gave such a charm to his speaking that wherever he spoke he always had a crowded hall of attentive, anxious listeners.

Harvard has turned out many fine scholars, but many had rhetoricians and elocutionists, especially of those who go through the theological department; that is, bad so far as their speaking and reading are concerned. Many of them have a way of reading part of their lecture or sermon so low that not a soul in the audience can hear a word they utter, and I believe they call this pathos. Many of them fall into the habit of uttering part of the elementary sounds in their words loud enough perhaps, but the remaining sounds so low that none can hear, except those on the front seats; and those as far back as the middle of the hall, if they are good guessers, may hear part of the sounds and guess the rest, and make out most of the words. But, if you don't happen to be a good guesser, or do not get the front seat, it matters not how good or how poor the lecture or sermon may be, it is enjoyable only in one class of cases: if the minister is young and handsome and unmarried, and you happen to be a young lady, and provide yourself with a good opera glass, you may sit on a back seat and enjoy—the sermon.

Many of these sermons are written by the hand of a master; they have every element of strength and excellence and power; they are high-toned and scholarly, urging most eloquently the needed reform, the high motive, the noble purpose in life,—urging us to the highest aspirations, to the best ideal of a pure life which culture and conscience can portray. And all this is enforced by his kind, gentle, loving heart. But, alas! he studied his rhetoric in Harvard; and the fine things he says are not heard, and he preaches to empty pews, and the great preparation for the life-work is almost lost for the want of suitable rhetoric and elocution by which the good things he writes may be presented to the public available.

There is one case of this kind in Worcester, where the house is from one-fifth to one-twelfth filled; yet the minister was educated at Harvard, and is a man of acknowledged talent. I doubt whether any one in Boston or Worcester exceeds him in his acquirements. His sermons have an excellence about them you seldom meet with. The reasoning is clear, the style is pleasant; but he does not make himself heard,—not because he does not have the power of voice (for I have in several instances heard nearly a sentence, even from a back seat, clearly and distinctly, and he could have given the whole sermon in that voice just as well). He has not trained himself to be heard; and he is therefore not heard, and thus he throws away four-fifths at least of his power.

The next thing to be considered is the motive. A large majority of teachers no doubt give their services for the pay in money which they get; and this is no bad motive. Yet there are many instances of teachers having, along with this, still higher motives. They may love their scholars, which increases their own effort and the success of the scholars. Then again patriotism may be a motive: the teacher may be impressed with the idea that, however free a people in a State may be, if this freedom is not based on the intelligence of the population, it cannot last. For this some teachers will labor harder, and sacrifice more of personal interest and comfort, than for wages or personal attachment to the pupils: it is a motive broader and higher. Again, sometimes the teacher's soul reaches a still higher plane in the scale of motive, and embraces the love of his fellow-men, of all mankind, and is so imbued with this that his selfish motive is as it were swallowed up in his love for mankind. His whole study, thought, and labor becomes one grand effort for the elevation and well-being of his fellow-men,—the lifting of humanity to a higher plane of intelligence, morality, and purity, to a love of justice for each and the rights of all.

It cannot be expected that these higher motives will always exist to the fullest degree in all of the multitude of teachers employed by the State; yet, by pursuing a suitable policy of making the best possible provisions for the teachers under all circumstances in which they may be placed, many having the highest motives and that peculiar talent suiting them specially for the vocation of teaching might be induced to go permanently into the profession. I think that the provision for retiring teachers after they have served faithfully for a term of years, and when their health has broken down during the service, would be one of the strongest inducements (and one of the most economical) to lead persons eminently qualified into the service. W. WICKERSHAM.

JESTINGS.

THE GOOD CONVEYANCER is known by his deeds.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

A MAN NEVER wants to laugh when a fly lights on his nose, but he is greatly tickled.

A PARADOX.—It sounds somewhat paradoxical to speak of an old salt fresh from sea.

A PAPER SPEAKS of a man who "died without the aid of a physician." Such instances are very rare.

A MEDICAL STUDENT says that he has never been able to discover the bone of contention, and desires to know if it is not the jaw-bone.

THE UNIVERSALIST and Unitarian papers are having a rather sarcastic debate as to which denomination has done most to abolish hell. Perhaps they had better wait and see how it turns out.—Golden Rule.

IT IS SAID if a dog howls of a night a death is certain to ensue. And it is a fact that every night dogs howl in this city, and every twenty-four hours somebody dies. This thing should be looked into.—Capital.

THE FOLLOWING dialogue actually occurred anent the recent open winter: Pat: "Moike, did iver ye see a winter loike this wan?" Mike: "Indade I did." Pat: "Whin?" Mike: "Lasht summer, shure, and begone to ye!"

A VERY OLD lady, on her death-bed, in a penitential mood, said: "I was a great sinner more than eighty years, and didn't know it." An old woman, who had lived with her a long time, exclaimed: "Lors! I knew it all the time!"

AN IRISHMAN who had been sick a long time was one day met by the parish priest, when the following conversation took place: "Well, Patrick, I am glad to see that you have recovered. Were you not afraid to meet your God?" "Oh, no, yer riverence! It was meetin' the other party that I was afeard uv" replied Pat.

AT A CROWDED French country theatre, a woman fell from the gallery to the pit, and was picked up by one of the spectators, who, hearing her groaning, asked her if she was much injured. "Much injured!" exclaimed the woman. "I should think I am. I have lost the best seat in the middle of the front row."

TWO SONS OF ERIN, shovelling on a hot day, stopped to rest, and exchanged views on the labor question: "Pat, this is mighty hard work we're at." "It is indade, Jemmy; but what kind of work is it you'd like, if you could get it?" "Well," said the other, leaning reflectively upon his shovel, and wiping the perspiration from his brow with the back of his hand, "for a nice, aisy, clane business, I think I would like to be a bishop."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	" 8 "	" "
" 26 " 51 "	" 6 "	" "
" 52 " " "	" 5 "	" "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.Y.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. R. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving

Principles of the Ox Brain
and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address, THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has special interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK, THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address, THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES and GENTLEMEN,
23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures).
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
 - II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
 - III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
 - IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
 - V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876).
 - VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.
- Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.
- REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50).
- PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.
- FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 234. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $5.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederic May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address

CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO., as Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 547.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND} {CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.
SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.
SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.
SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.
SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the Editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

PERSONAL NOTICE.

All personal communications for F. E. Abbot should be hereafter addressed to him at "Lake View Avenue, Cambridge, Mass."

GLIMPSES.

THE FIRST INDEPENDENT SOCIETY of Revere, Massachusetts, of which Mr. L. K. Washburn is the minister, has changed its name to "The First Free Religious Society of Revere," in order to indicate more plainly its sympathy with the Free Religious movement.

JOHN STUART MILL was evidently in favor of compulsory education. In his noble treatise On Liberty, he said: "Is it not almost a self-evident axiom that the State should require and compel the education, up to a certain standard, of every human being who is born its citizen? Yet who is there that is not afraid to recognize and assert this truth?"

THE CATHOLICS have won a signal victory over the public school system at Charleston, South Carolina. The School Board of that city, acting on a proposition of Bishop Lynch, have accepted from the Catholics a separate school, in which the teachers are exclusively appointed by the Catholic authorities, yet paid from the public treasury. This action has called forth a public "Minority Protest" from two members of the School Board, C. G. Memminger and A. Toomer Porter, which ought to be the beginning of a reversal of this ruinous policy.

THIS NOTICE has been widely published in the secular press: "The freethinkers' convention of the United States and Canada will be held at Hornellsville, N.Y., on the first four days of next September. The Opera House is engaged, and the village park will be fitted up for out-door speakers. Among the persons expected are Charles Bradlaugh, M.P., of England, who is to visit this country this season, Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, Mr. B. F. Underwood of Boston, Felix Adler of New York city, the Rev. Mr. Chainey of Evansville, Indiana, the Rev. J. H. Burnham of Michigan, A. B. Bradford of Pennsylvania, Elizur Wright of Boston, James Parton, and others." The managers of this convention are the same disreputable clique of free-lovers and repealers who successfully carried out their conspiracy to capture the National Liberal League at Syracuse; but they have the shrewdness to keep themselves in the background, and to use the names of others before the public,—without authority, we are persuaded, in at least the case of Dr. Adler and Mr. Underwood. If so, these gentlemen will probably repudiate this impudent and unauthorized use of their names for purposes with which they cannot sympathize.

OUR GOOD and true friend, Rev. M. J. Savage, said in THE INDEX of June 3 referring to the famous preamble reaffirmed by the National Unitarian Conference at Syracuse in 1866: "I, as one Unitarian, have never regarded the Syracuse vote concerning 'the Lordship of Jesus' as having any authoritative and binding force. It was only a majority vote for one year; and any other year is at liberty to reconsider. I do not feel myself obliged to believe with the majority." We do not think this view a correct one. The "Lordship of Jesus" is affirmed, not in an ordinary resolution, but in the Constitution of the Conference—in its permanent and fundamental law—in that which constitutes the Conference an organization and determines the universal character of that organization. Every member of the Conference is a member under that Constitution, and no other; every member, therefore, is bound by it, and can only break the bond by withdrawing. That is why we withdrew in 1866. If Mr. Savage should try to change that preamble at the next session of the Conference, he would find that the Unitarian denomination would reaffirm it even more emphatically than before; that is our firm belief. The "Unitarian boundary" is precisely that preamble; it is not a mere "majority vote," but the organic law of the Conference itself, which every member accepts by the simple fact of his membership. Mr. Savage clearly sees what would be the result of incorporating a recognition of Christianity in the preamble to the Constitution of the United States. Very well: the Unitarian Conference have recognized both God and Christ in their Constitution. Can the consequences be different in the two cases?

UNDER THE CAPTION of "The Vatican and the Modern State," the Boston Advertiser strikingly illustrates that "invincible ignorance" of the situation which constitutes the only real danger of the success of Catholic ambition in this country. On the one hand, it clearly discerns the superiority of the "Catholic genius" over the "modern spirit" as manifested among Protestants (i.e., not carried out logically into thorough-going political secularism): "Never in all the centuries of its existence has the Latin Church possessed such harmony of mind and spirit, so amazing a concord in matters of polity and doctrine, as to-day. Never has the Latin Church had as good reason for pretending to be the one holy, Catholic, and apostolic Church as to-day. The dogma of infallibility has united the Latin Church, instead of dividing it; it has increased the authority of the Pope; and in its conflict with the modern spirit it has invariably proved to be the stronger of the two. In England, which boastfully considers itself the most Protestant and the most pious of countries, the Catholic Church has celebrated conquest after conquest, and is now a recognized power of no mean rank. This shows either that the Catholic genius is stronger, or that the modern spirit is weaker, than is commonly supposed among Protestants. It seems to be tolerably well established by the agitated church history of the last ten years that modern liberalism, as now exercised, is not equal to a successful struggle with the Vatican. The latter has been denounced, execrated, and vilified; but it has not been damaged, much less has it been undermined." On the other hand, the Advertiser seems to imagine that the "Catholic genius" undergoes a touching change of heart, when it crosses the Atlantic: "The present struggle in France and Germany is deeply interesting and instructive, although a similar conflict is not likely to arise in the United States. In central Europe, the Catholic establishment is an integral part of the commonwealth and recognized as such: this is not the case in the United States. The governments of France and Germany claim to be the supreme authority in absolutely all things; hence they demand the obedience of the church as such. The theory of our government is fortunately less grasping, and excludes all opinions from official control: it confines its attention to outward things, and to these only in a limited way. Hence a Catholic conflict here is politically impossible, and the whole issue, if any, must be worked out socially. Both sides can afford to cultivate comity and civil cordiality, and to appeal to the natural development of time and society." All that the Catholic Church needs, in order to accomplish the total subjugation of the United States, is the continuance and prevalence of the opinion here expressed—that "a Catholic conflict here is politically impossible." That opinion, if it ever becomes universal, will put the Pope's foot on the neck of the American people. The Catholic Church is resolved to rule every government on the face of the earth; and it will succeed in ruling every government which is too stupid to comprehend this purpose or too irresolute to defeat it by compelling the Catholic Church to obey the laws of the land at any and every cost, and by carrying out with inexorable rigor the complete programme of the "Demands of Liberalism."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Farewell Discourse

TO THE INDEPENDENT SOCIETY OF DOVER, N.H., IN AMERICAN HALL, OCTOBER 4, 1868.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

"This is human undoing,—this is the siege,—this the overthrow,—when right principles are ruined and destroyed." "Be willing to approve yourself to yourself. Be willing to appear beautiful in the sight of God. Be desirous to converse in purity with your own pure mind and with God."

DISCOURSES OF EPICTETUS.

It is impossible for me to feel anything but the deepest regret, my friends, when I say, as I must say, that I have invited you here to-night to bid you good-bye. I had hoped to continue as your preacher for, at least, six months longer, and expect still to remain here awhile as your friend and neighbor; but so grave a difference has arisen between the Independent Society and myself, on a point of practical duty, that I have felt obliged to choose between devotion to principle and devotion to you. What would I not have given to escape this choice! I give you full credit for a purpose as pure and a conscience as scrupulous, as I trust my own have been; God forbid that I should still further embitter this hour, to me quite bitter enough, by any pharisaic assumption of moral superiority! The painful fact is that what I judge vital to our enterprise you judge superfluous and inexpedient,—that what you judge right I am compelled to judge wrong. Believe me sincere, I beg you, in saying that, after the proofs I have seen of your moral courage and reverence for justice and determination to do right at all costs, I cannot in my innermost thought question the perfect purity of your motives. I cannot help believing you woefully mistaken, and sure at last to deplore your own mistake; but neither can I help believing that you have honestly meant to obey conscience to the uttermost, and have been perfectly true to your own convictions. In what I have to say, therefore, acquit me of all intention of directly expressing, or of indirectly insinuating, any blame whatsoever. I am not here to censure you, but to justify myself; and, having explained as well as I am able why I can no longer act with you, I shall come to you in private friendship with undiminished confidence, affection, and expectation of hearty welcome. Deeply as I regret the extinction of a movement from which I hoped such great future good to the cause of spiritual freedom and progress, I can unfeignedly rejoice in the good it has already accomplished; and I give you my sincerest thanks for the generous support you have accorded me in a very unpopular position. Friends have we been from the start,—friends let us remain even to the end!

I cannot explain my course to you without referring to events beyond the limits of our little community. The Unitarian denomination once had a fellowship so free that I felt perfectly at home in it, and watched the development of liberal ideas within its communion with great interest and hope. But since the New York Convention in 1865, and especially since the Syracuse Conference in 1866, I have become convinced that the soul of Unitarianism is evaporating in proportion as its body fattens; and that all the fresh life it contains will speedily perish or make its escape. Unitarian development has become petrification, and that is death. The spirit of the denomination, as a whole, has undergone a melancholy change; and instead of aspiring to lead the van, it is falling rapidly to the rear. Once creedless and free, it now wears the fetters of a virtual creed, and allows a numerical majority to construct a theological platform for the whole denomination. No radical can attend its Conferences without being made to pass under the yoke; and even if he goes avowedly to reform the platform, he must first of all plant himself upon it. When the majority claim for themselves the right of avowing their theology in the preamble, and deny to the minority a similar right, it is plain enough that majority and minority do not meet on equal terms, but that the minority are present purely on sufferance, and must purchase tickets of admission with the gold of self-respect. For myself, I do not buy such privilege with such coin: let me stand alone, if I cannot stand unbent in the presence of my fellows. The influence of these Unitarian Conferences is fearfully demoralizing to the best instincts of their young men; and if I have any fixed purpose whatever, it is to lend no sanction to enterprises which aim a deadly blow at the freedom and integrity of the soul. Against the spiritual corruption of this new ecclesiastical tyranny, I make uncompromising protest; and the only way to make effective protest is boldly to come out. For this reason, I avowedly left the Unitarian denomination last March, and have ever since rejoiced in the freedom I thereby won. The moral influence of these great conferences commits the whole denomination to their position; and I have learned by experience the folly of attempting to shake off this influence within the charmed sectarian circle. Outside alone is freedom, and outside henceforth I stand.

When, therefore, I deliberately discarded the Unitarian and Christian names, this step was by no means a mere matter of words; it meant the standing aloof, albeit in utter solitude, from all Unitarian and distinctively Christian organizations. Time will bring out the full significance of the step, which few of my friends as yet perceive. But feeling profoundly the importance, if not to others, at least to myself, of making my protest earnest and complete, I resolved, after the expiration of my Unitarian pastorate, to refuse to connect myself again, whether directly or indirectly, with any Unitarian or Christian society. Several invitations came to me last spring to preach as candidate to Unitarian societies, accompanied by promises of perfect freedom for myself; but, in accordance with this resolution, I declined them all, and, as I stated in my farewell sermon to the Unitarian Society in this place, looked forward to a speedy and permanent close of my ministry.

Immediately after the delivery of my farewell sermon, however, a movement started at the church door to retain me as a preacher in Dover, notwithstanding the public position I had taken. The next day, March 30, my friends in the old society, wholly without my knowledge, went to the annual parish meeting, and elected radical wardens, with authority to supply the Unitarian pulpit as they should think proper. The plan then entertained was to invite me to preach to the Unitarian Society, not as its settled minister, but simply as its preacher for the year,—it being supposed that this course would leave me perfectly free to occupy my own ground, uncommitted to the Unitarian denomination. The new wardens, therefore, invited me to preach in my old pulpit the very next Sunday; but I declined doing so until I knew precisely what relation I should thereby occupy towards my former Society, and what would be its action at the adjourned parish meeting. During this interval between the first and second parish meetings, I became convinced of two things, first, that my friends, having fairly got control of the church, were strongly disinclined to form a new society, and, secondly, that the proposed plan would conflict with my determination to stand wholly aloof from the Unitarian sect. At a meeting of my friends, therefore, held at the house of Mr. Wallingford the evening before the second parish meeting, I said, plainly and emphatically, that I could not again become their preacher unless they should either change the name of the Unitarian Society, or else form a new Independent Society. I then left the meeting, and my friends discussed the matter freely among themselves. My own expectation was that they would not accept either condition, and that the whole movement would thus be nipped in the bud. But, after a full discussion, my friends concluded, as I was distinctly informed, to accept the second condition I had named, and to form a new and wholly Independent Society. At the second parish meeting, therefore, held April 13, many of my friends were absent, and several of those who were present declined to vote,—it being the general intention, as I supposed, to leave the church altogether and go into a hall. But by some misunderstanding the following resolution was offered to the meeting:—

"Resolved, That the wardens be authorized and instructed to hire Rev. Francis E. Abbot to preach in this church the ensuing year."

The vote stood, Yeas 24, Nays 24; and, there being a tie, Mr. Wheeler, the chairman, gave the casting vote in the negative. If the resolution had passed, it could plainly have done no good, after what I had said the previous evening; and for this reason several of my friends omitted to vote altogether, although by doing so they could have changed the result. A second resolution was then offered, as follows:—

"Resolved, That the wardens shall employ none other than Unitarian Christians to supply the desk in this house."

With an unimportant amendment, this resolution was passed,—not, as has been asserted, unanimously, unless that is a unanimous vote which is simply not opposed. If I have been correctly informed by several of my friends who were present and did not vote, there was an actual radical majority in the meeting. However this may have been, the radical wardens at once resigned, conservative wardens were nominated who refused, however, to serve as such, and the meeting was adjourned a fortnight for the purpose of then electing wardens who would serve.

Thus at the second parish meeting the church passed into the control of the conservatives, and I believe there was at that time but one purpose among my friends, namely, to go into a hall and start outside as an Independent Society. During this interval, however, between the second and third parish meetings, measures were taken by the conservatives which seemed to my friends an outrage on their equal property rights as members of the Unitarian Society; and they resolved to attend the third parish meeting for the purpose of vindicating these rights. Meanwhile a subscription paper had been carried round with the following heading:—

"We, the undersigned, hereby constitute ourselves an 'Independent Society,' for the purpose of maintaining free religious principles in Dover; and, in order to carry out this purpose, we agree to pay the sums set opposite our names for the support of Rev. Francis Ellingwood Abbot as our preacher for the ensuing year."

Enough money was pledged on this paper to sustain the movement; and, having made a definite agreement with the leading men concerned in it, I held the first public services of the new Society in AMERICAN HALL, Sunday evening, April 26, and then and there announced the fact of my engagement as preacher to the Independent Society for the year. The next day, April 27, the third parish meeting was held in the Unitarian church, the former radical wardens were reelected by a vote of 53 to 48, and resolutions, offered by Mr. Wheeler, were passed by a vote of 53 to 46, assigning the use of the church to "each of the two divisions of said Society" for one-half the time. In consequence of verbal explanations made at the time by Mr. Wheeler in offering these resolutions, it was universally understood, both by radicals and conservatives, that it was intended to give to the Independent Society the use of the church for half the time. It has been in virtue of this vote alone, so understood, that I have conceived myself justified hitherto in preaching in the Unitarian church. If I had for a moment supposed that the audience to which I preached regarded itself, not as a bona fide Independent Society, but only as the radical portion of the Unitarian Society, I should never have consented to stand again in my former pulpit.

About six weeks after our first services in American Hall, I became convinced that the Independent Society must either complete its legal organization, or else come under suspicion of being a nonentity, a mere blind for deceiving the public in regard to the real nature of our movement. Accordingly, early in June, I requested you to take such steps as were necessary, in order to complete the legal organization of our Society. You promptly voted to do so, and appointed a committee of three to report on this subject at an adjourned meeting. The following is the official record of this adjourned meeting:—

"DOVER, June 9, 1868.

"At a meeting of the first Independent Religious Society of the city of Dover for the promotion of free religious principles, Zimri S. Wallingford was chosen Moderator; and Thaddeus P. Cressey, Secretary pro tempore.

"Jasper H. York, from the Committee on Permanent Organization, reported the names of Zimri S. Wallingford, Lucius Everett, Josiah B. Folsom, for Wardens, and Thaddeus P. Cressey, for Clerk.

"On motion of Mr. Everett to proceed to choice of officers, Zimri S. Wallingford, Lucius Everett, and Josiah B. Folsom were chosen Wardens, and Thaddeus P. Cressey Clerk, for the ensuing year.

"The oath of office was then duly administered to the Wardens and Clerk.

"On motion of Dr. York, Jasper H. York, Russell B. Wiggan, [John] Bell, Mrs. Z. S. Wallingford, and Mrs. J. B. Folsom were chosen a committee to draft by-laws, and report at the next adjourned meeting.

"The meeting was then adjourned to Tuesday evening, June 16, at 8 o'clock.

(Signed) "T. P. CRESSEY, Clerk."

After these proceedings, I think we all believed that we had complied with all the conditions of forming a legal organization. Notice of the election of these officers was published in the Dover Gazette, and I, at least, thought we had done everything required by straightforward dealing in the matter of organization. Of your intention to organize legally and completely, I think there could be no doubt at that time; and if you made any oversight or mistake, I, for one, am satisfied it was purely accidental.

In June, however, a complaint was made to the Supreme Court by the conservative members of the Unitarian Society, asking that an injunction should be issued restraining us from occupying the Unitarian church. Mr. Wheeler, acting as your counsel in the case, denies the existence of any Independent Society, declares that you occupy the church as Unitarians and nothing else, and hence makes it appear that, contrary to all my public statements, I am still the preacher of a Unitarian society. Such is his argument, as contained in his printed brief, and published to the community. He holds the opinion that your success in the pending law-suit depends on the validity of this argument, and that you cannot occupy the church except as a Unitarian Society, or the majority of it. By his argument, therefore, he has placed you in a very awkward predicament. If you go on and complete immediately your legal organization (some trifling details of which, as Mr. Wheeler states, are still wanting), he says you will lose the church; but if you wait, and win the case by means of his argument, I believe you will lose what is worth infinitely more than the church,—namely, the principle for which we contend. We have taken the ground, publicly and privately, that we are an Independent Society; can we afford to win our suit on the ground that we are not? The case will not be decided till late in December; you have ample time to set this matter right. In my opinion, honor and integrity are at stake. Only one course seems to me just and right,—to organize at once in accordance with the letter of the law, and then run the risk of losing the church. To postpone all action on this matter, and to hold the church till after December as a majority of the Unitarian Society, notwithstanding our public profession of being an Independent Society,—this is a course I cannot adopt myself, nor be a party to, directly or indirectly. I remained with you solely on condition of your forming an Independent Society, having a perfect right to say on what terms I could, or could not, conscientiously remain; I understood you to agree to comply with this condition; you and I both thought that it had been fully complied with; it now turns out that such is not the case, and I have but asked you to do now what you intended to do before, and believed you had done. Is there anything exacting, or over-sensitive, or unreasonable, in my request? I told you at the start I could not preach to a Unitarian Society; you respected my scruples, whether you thought them well-founded or not, and consented to form an Independent Society. Now that your action has given rise to an important property question, which your counsel declares to hinge on the legality or non-legality of our new Society, it has seemed to me our duty at present, whatever might be our duty under other circumstances, to legalize our new association without delay, that the Supreme Court may decide fairly to whom the control of the Unitarian church really belongs. I have believed, and believe still, that, notwithstanding Mr. Wheeler's argument, our right to occupy the church is clear, both legally and morally; for a fair majority of any society may rightfully control the use of its own buildings. But I am sure that no one of you wishes to retain the church unfairly; and if you did but see what I see plainly, and what the community will see as plainly, you would be eager to do the very thing which now you judge inexpedient and uncalled-for. I attribute our difference of opinion to a perfectly honest misunderstanding on your part of what duty in this case requires,—not, I beg you to believe, to any unwillingness to do what you yourselves regard as duty. But because I know you mean to do right, I cannot, for that reason, join you in doing what I see to be wrong; and consequently, since your vote of last Sunday not to organize any further at present, I have felt obliged to regard my engagement as cancelled by the non-fulfilment of the condition on which alone I formed it. In asking you to meet me here this evening, I have desired only to explain to you in kind and friendly terms why, after all your sacrifices for me, I have felt obliged to resign; that you may not suppose me influenced by caprice, or whim, or pettish resentment at not having my own way. In this matter I have no way of my own—I seek only to walk in God's way, and even to walk apart from my dearest friends, if I cannot otherwise walk in His way. From beginning to end of this unhappy controversy, I have striven always to be just and kind even to those who seemed determined to misrepresent me; I would scrupulously respect their rights, even if they disregard ours; and I have rejoiced unspeakably because I have all along thought I discerned the same spirit in you. Believe me, I would sacrifice anything but my self-respect and my honest scruples, in order to carry through successfully our free movement in this place; but I have preferred deliberately to destroy the work of my own hands, and undo all that I have toiled to achieve these six tempestuous months, rather than suffer its spiritual beauty to be tarnished by a blot. Let me encounter cheerfully the sneers that ever wait on failure, rather than win applause that shall find no echo in my own soul. My deepest grief is this, that others, not knowing you as I have known you, may unjustly censure your course, and attribute to unworthy motives what I believe to spring from simple misconception of facts. You thought you had done enough in the way of organization; and so you would have done enough, were it not for this property question, and the argument of your counsel. These have made it incumbent on us to accept the legal disadvantages, as well as the moral advantages, of an unsectarian association; to remain as we were, and win a good cause by misrepresentation of facts, would not be right. So, at least, I judge, and so I have acted.

That you may understand the character of the association I have wished to see formed, and that you may acquit me of all desire to commit you to my own theological opinions, I will read the "Articles of Agreement" which I submitted to your Standing Committee, previous to your vote of Sunday last:—

"ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT."

"ART. I. This association shall be called 'The Independent Religious Society in Dover, N.H.'"

"ART. II. Its objects shall be to uphold the principles of Free Religion in this community by whatever methods it shall deem proper, and to advance the cause of truth, righteousness, and love, throughout the world."

"ART. III. Any person may become a member of this association by subscribing these articles of agreement."

"ART. IV. Membership in this association shall leave each individual responsible for his or her own opinions alone, and shall affect in no degree his or her relation to other associations."

"ART. V. The officers of this association shall be a standing committee of three members, and a clerk who shall be duly sworn; all of whom shall be annually elected."

"ART. VI. This association may from time to time adopt such further articles, by-laws, or regulations, as it shall deem proper."

Let these short and simple articles explain what I believe to be the only true basis of religious organization, and what I believe will yet take the place of all creeds and sectarian battle-cries. Men of unlike faiths may yet meet as brothers on equal terms, and join in good enterprises of all sorts, without prying into each other's orthodoxy. The Christian church cannot exist on this broad platform, on which Christian and Jew, Brahman and Buddhist, theist and atheist, materialist and spiritualist, may meet in amity if they choose. He who believes in a platform of universal freedom and mutual respect for individual rights cannot long wish to stand on any narrower platform, but is inspired by his idea to embrace all mankind in the vast circle of his sympathies. And it is because I love this spiritual platform, this truly American platform, that I refuse any longer to stand on the narrow planks of any denomination. The world is my church, and humanity is my sect; the universe is my Bible, and the Infinite Spirit is my God. Let those who will cramp themselves into sectarian straight-jackets; I have learned the love of freedom, and can trust myself outside of the "Christian fold." If, from my hasty and imperfect discourses, any one has caught a spark of the enthusiasm for spiritual liberty which has glowed in my heart, or shared at all my own yearning for a spiritual fellowship broad as humanity itself, then the labors of this brief half-year have not been in vain; and, in bidding each other now good-bye, we need not regret the enterprise whose history ends to-night. My last word is, be true to truth, and God defend the right!

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS AND THE CONVERSION OF ENGLAND.—Cardinal Newman attended a meeting of the Catholic Union of Great Britain at Willis' Rooms on Wednesday, and delivered an address upon the subject of the conversion of England to the Roman Catholic faith. The Cardinal examined the features which characterized the prayers of their co-religionists in the Tudor and Stuart periods, and showed what, he thought, should be the spirit and form of the prayers offered now with a view to the growth of his Church in England. The Duke of Norfolk, who presided, subsequently presented his distinguished guest with a massive golden salver, which the Roman Catholics of Australia had forwarded as a token of their esteem and affection for Cardinal Newman.

The Supreme Court's Summary

OF THE ESSENTIAL FACTS IN THE DOVER UNITARIAN CHURCH CASE.

From the decision of the Court pronounced by Judge Sargent, and published in the New Hampshire Reports, Vol. 53, pages 9-276.

It appears from the copies from the records of this society and from the evidence that Mr. Abbot was ordained as pastor of The First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover on the 31st of August, 1864. That he then understood that he was to act as pastor of the church as well as of the society appears from the following extract from his letter of acceptance, as found in the records of said society: "Unless our church shall be a united, earnest, and working one, no amount of outward prosperity or social enjoyment can make it anything but a wreck and failure, and I interpret your invitation as implying, on your part, a pledge of hearty support in all right works and ways." And at the time of his ordination he had his two children baptized, one about two years old, and the other an infant. They were baptized in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, as a consecration of them to the service of God. See Barnes' and Abbot's depositions. And we have no doubt that Mr. Abbot at that time assented to the declaration required by the church covenant, previous to the baptism of his children; namely, that he "believed in Jesus Christ as the Messiah, and regarded his religion as a revelation from God."

The council for his ordination was composed of ministers and delegates from several neighboring Congregational (Unitarian) churches, and the record of their proceedings is as follows: "On Wednesday, August 31, 1864, at ten and one-half o'clock A.M., at a meeting of pastors and delegates, present by invitation, for the ordination of Mr. Francis E. Abbot as minister of The First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover, Judge H. A. Bellows was chosen moderator, and Rev. H. W. Foote, scribe. Mr. Hale read the record of the action of the society, and their correspondence with Mr. Abbot. Rev. E. E. Hale moved that the council is satisfied with the proceedings, and is prepared to proceed to the ordination of Mr. Abbot. Rev. Dr. Clark moved that the scribe be instructed to furnish copies of this record, to be entered on the records of this society. The meeting then adjourned." The exercises at the ordination consisted of the usual introductory prayer, reading of the Scriptures, ordination hymn, sermon, ordaining prayer, charge, right hand of fellowship, address to the people, concluding prayer, and benediction. He was, then, it would seem, a believer in Christianity, and was, therefore, either a Roman Catholic or a Protestant; and there is no claim that he was a Catholic.

We will next examine the main charge in the bill, namely, that Mr. Abbot has apostatized from the Christian faith, and become a disbeliever in Christianity, and also in Unitarianism; and that he is now occupying said church, not as a public teacher of Christianity, but as an open opposer of Christianity,—as an avowed deist or theist, disowning Jesus Christ as the Messiah, and his religion as the only true religion; and charging that said Abbot is now neither a Unitarian nor a Christian.

Mr. Abbot remained with this society, as pastor or religious teacher, till April 1, 1868, when, by his resignation, that relation terminated. Towards the latter part of his preaching, he made statements that "Jesus Christ was like other men, with no more authority," and compared Christ with Garrison and other good men; that he doubted whether there was more than one pulpit in Boston that he (Abbot) would be allowed to occupy; stated that he was looked upon as a "rebel" in his theology (Barnes' 1st deposition); that he considered Christ as a mere man, and fallible like other men; that Christ was not the Messiah, and that, if he (Christ) believed himself to be the Messiah, he was mistaken (Andrews' deposition); that the New Testament showed that Christ did claim to be the Messiah, but that he (Abbot) believed the Messiah had not come, and would not come (Bell's deposition).

He went on in this way, step by step, until he openly declared himself not a Christian nor a Unitarian, so far as Unitarianism was based upon Christianity or the recognition of Christ as the Messiah; proclaimed himself a theist, and preached his theistic doctrines to such an extent as to give great dissatisfaction to the members of the church and society,—in consequence of which his subscription list fell off until he was advised by his friends to resign, which he at once did; and by arrangement his term of service terminated April 1, 1868.

On Sunday, the 15th of March, 1868, said Abbot, in his public discourse, stated his belief in the following propositions: "1st, That Christianity is merely one among many religions; 2d, That each religion is partly true and partly false; and, 3d, That pure theism, which is the common element, the universal essence of all religion, is by itself greater and truer than all." The following are also extracts from said sermon: "Whoever has been so fired in his own spirit by the overwhelming thought of the Divine Being as to kindle the flames of faith in the hearts of his fellow-men, whether Confucius or Zoroaster or Moses or Jesus or Mohammed, has thereby proved himself to be a true prophet of the living God; and thus every great historic religion dates from a genuine inspiration by the Eternal Spirit." Speaking of the teachings of Jesus Christ, he said: "Love to God and to man is the epitome of his instruction, and this is simply faith in the Divine in its twofold aspect. Hence I deem it right to say that Jesus himself was not a Christian, but a simple theist, and that simple theism is the entire burden of his life and doctrine." Speaking of the Messiah, he said: "I regard the doctrine of the Messiahship as, in any sense, a superstition of the times. The pretence that any man has been singled out to be a permanent Christ, Messiah, or Mediator to his fellow-beings, is, to me, monstrous. Henceforth I claim to be neither a Unitarian nor a Christian, but simply a theist. . . . Jesus I believe to have been a theist, and Christianity I believe to be a perversion of theism. In resigning the names Unitarian and Christian, I do so with full knowledge of the grave, practical consequences that must ensue; but, wishing ever to be docile to the teachings of life, this step seems to me the plain lesson of recent circumstances."

In preaching his farewell sermon, March 29, 1868, he commenced as follows: "My text this morning is taken from no Hebrew Scriptures, whether of the Old or New Testaments. America is every whit as sacred as Judea. God is as near to you and to me as ever he was to Moses, to Jesus, or to Paul. Wherever a human soul is born into the love of truth and high virtue, there is the 'Holy Land.' Wherever a human soul has uttered its sincere and brave faith in the Divine, and thus bequeathed to us the legacy of inspired words, there is the 'Holy Bible.' To find my text, therefore, for the last morning of my ministry in Dover, I cannot travel across the Atlantic and the Mediterranean to ransack the Orient for a prophet, nor leap the gulf of eighteen centuries to find a word that shall fit this occasion, to me so earnest and full of moment. I am impelled to turn to some American scripture, instinct with the deep religion of the day. I am impelled to listen to some American prophet, whose soul is fired with the Divine suggestions and fathomless significance of all human life. This shall be my text, taken from a seer as truly and as highly inspired as any that ever prophesied in days of yore. I mean, Ralph Waldo Emerson."

In the course of this sermon, he alluded to the charge that he came among them as a "conservative," when his real views, when he came to express them, were most "radical." He said that in one of his earliest sermons he had taken the position that "Christ is a mere man," and that all his wonderful power is the simple product of character; that this doctrine is not a reproach to Jesus, but rather praise and exaltation. He then adds: "In these statements you have the germ of everything that is radical in theology. The moment a man gives up the absolute Deity of Jesus, he cannot stop till he accepts his mere humanity, that is, if he can think. Unitarians, I confess, often succeed in stopping half-way, but do it by ceasing to think. Begin to doubt the 'Deity of Christ,' and, if your mind is active and strong, you cannot stop doubting till you have doubted yourself out of Christianity into pure theism. That is where I am to-day,—outside the warm shelter of the Christian church, in the vast expanse of God's boundless universe, yet still at home."

He assigns, as a reason for leaving the Unitarian denomination, the fact that, at their conventions in 1865 and 1866, held at New York and at Syracuse, they adopted a platform distinctively Christian. He says, "I feel convinced that henceforth the Unitarians, as a sect, will maintain their stand on what is called 'distinctively Christian ground,' which, in plain English, means the Lordship or Messiahship of Jesus." In his deposition, taken in this case, Mr. Abbot says, "Christianity, in my opinion, is religion, as taught in the New Testament, and more especially in the Gospels, and based upon faith in Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ of God"; that the distinction between religion and Christianity "is substantially one of the bases on which the two rest,—religion rests on universal humanity, Christianity rests on the individual Jesus"; that he cannot longer coöperate with the Unitarian denomination, because it "has practically avowed its faith in the Divine authority of Christ"; and, in stating the reason why he is not a Christian, he says, "I believe that faith in Jesus as the Christ or Spiritual Messiah, in some sense or other, is essential to Christianity, and I do not entertain that faith in any sense."

The 1st of April, 1868, Mr. Abbot commenced preaching for and to an independent society, in a hall in Dover; and, after preaching there a few Sabbaths, he returned to the church of the Unitarian society, and preached there alternate Sundays for a few months. While thus engaged, he wrote to the editor of the Liberal Christian, a newspaper published in New York city, which communication, dated May 11, was printed in the number of that paper dated May 23, 1868, of which the following are extracts:—

"The true historic significance of the Christian name is that of the 'Christian confession,' namely, that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God. On this confession Jesus himself founded his church, and on this confession alone can Christianity, as a distinct religion, continue to stand. Etymology, history, and philosophy prove equally that Christianity has no basis, except in the Messianic mission of Jesus as spiritual leader of humanity and Savior of the world."

"Whoever is unable to regard him as, in some sense or other, the Hebrew Messiah, can call himself a Christian only in a private, esoteric, or transcendental interpretation of the word, and therefore, it seems to me, at the expense of perfect sincerity."

"Wisely, or unwisely, I have come to the conclusion that in no sense is Jesus the Messiah or Christ of God. The soul is its own Christ. Humanity is its own Messiah. I reject Christianity that I may still cleave to religion, which admits of no mediator because it is immediate. There is no room in religion for the intervention of a third person. What distinguishes Christianity from religion is its error and limitation alone. What is universal in it belongs to religion, and not to itself. In discarding the Christian name, therefore, I discard nothing but error and limitation, and because the step involves complete disconnection from all organizations calling themselves Christian. It is infinitely more than a mere matter of words. . . . The Unitarian conference have taken their stand upon the Christian confession, and all Christian bodies must take the same stand. Christianity must say something or other about Jesus, must, in some way, confess his moral leadership, must take him as a perfect exemplar and perfect teacher, must connect itself indissolubly with his historic personality.

"But religion has no more to do with Jesus than it has with Judas. It leaves the soul alone with God. It acknowledges no leader; is loyal to no master; imitates no exemplar; looks to no redeemer; needs no savior; knows no Christ. The very heart of Christianity, as taught by Jesus himself, is the Christian confession that 'Jesus is the Christ of God.' I cannot in any sense, literal or metaphorical, make this confession."

It will thus be seen that the charges against the defendant Abbot, as set forth in the bill, are substantially proved. I have also given much that he said and wrote in connection with the words charged in the bill, for the purpose of showing that these words were spoken and written understandingly and deliberately, and expressed his sincere belief and honest sentiments.

In May, 1868, two protests were made in writing to the acting wardens of this society, one signed by over forty, and the other by eighty-five names, which were similar in purport, one of which was as follows:—

"Whereas, A 'theist is neither a Unitarian nor a Christian,' and whereas, Christ and anti-Christ, being in nature and spirit antagonistical, cannot with propriety be preached from the same pulpit, and would necessarily tend to subvert the foundation on which this society is built,—

"Therefore, the undersigned, members of the 'First Unitarian Society of Christians,' in Dover, N.H., do hereby protest against the use of the church of said society, in whole or in part, for theistical preaching or lectures, or for any purpose whatever, not in harmony with the avowed objects of said society, which are the building up and sustaining a Christian society in Dover, under the protection of the constitution and laws of the State of New Hampshire."

In his deposition taken in this case, Mr. Abbot states that, at the time of his said ordination in Dover (August 31, 1864), he regarded himself as "a minister of the gospel of Jesus," but that now he claims "to be a minister, not of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but of the gospel of humanity," which he believes to be "the only gospel in harmony with the religious wants of the age"; that his views in matters of theology have changed since his said ordination, "in the sense of a natural growth and development"; that he was educated as a "conservative Unitarian Christian," but now finds himself obliged by his convictions "to stand outside of organized Unitarianism and of Christianity"; that his views in relation to the ordinances of the gospel have also changed since his ordination; that at that time he had his two children baptized; that it was done simply in recognition of his "grave responsibility for their wise training and religious education," but that he now regards "baptism as the symbol of admission into the Christian church"; that at the time of his ordination he "regarded baptism as a spiritual symbol of consecration to the service of God," but that he now "believes all symbolical acts in religion to belong to an immature state of religious development," and that, as minister of the independent society to which he was then preaching, he would not administer either the ordinance of baptism or the Lord's supper; and that he now considers himself as independent, in his religious belief and public religious teachings, of all bibles, churches, and Messiahs; and that, as he understands the term "Christian," no man, who agrees with him in his belief in these respects, can fairly and truthfully be called a Christian; and that he has formally withdrawn from the Unitarian denomination, and requested his name dropped from the roll of Unitarian ministers just prior to April 1, 1868.

We thus see that the charge made in the answer of the defendants (except Abbot) that said Abbot was a progressive man, and that he changed his opinions from time to time, is true. Very radical changes had taken place in his views upon fundamental questions and doctrines in theology after coming to Dover, and before the filing of this bill. We are also satisfied that the further charge in the answer of all the defendants (except Abbot), that said Abbot "is free in his thought and free in his speech," is also true; and that he may properly be styled a "freethinker," in the technical sense of that term. We are also satisfied that he is "honest, sincere, truthful, and clear in his expression," as charged in the answer.

But the charge that the quotations in the bill, purporting to be from his sermons, "are garbled extracts, and taken alone are deceptive, tending, if not designed, to misrepresent the sentiment, tone, and spirit of his ministrations, seems to be wholly unfounded, as we have already seen. Indeed, Mr. Abbot for himself makes no such claim. He is too "honest, sincere, and truthful" to do so. In fact he has done everything that a man can well do to put himself, or, as he expresses it, "to take his stand," outside of Christianity. 1. He does not believe in the facts, the doctrines, or the ordinances of Christianity. He does not admit that Jesus Christ was a leader, a master, or even an exemplar. He denies that he was or is a mediator, a redeemer, or a savior of men. He does not receive him or believe in him as the Christ of God,—the true Messiah. He does not believe that Christ was a prophet even, any more than Confucius, Zoroaster, or Mohammed was. He does not receive the Bible as a revelation from God, or as of any higher authority than the writings of Garrison and of Emerson. 2. He has taken particular pains to publish his disbelief of Christianity, by preaching and writing and printing his views, so that no one need be deceived, or mistaken, or misinformed in relation to them.

The charge in the answer that Mr. Abbot's views, when fully and fairly expressed, are "not peculiar to him, but are substantially held by many clergymen and others who call themselves Unitarians," is simply a charge that this class of Unitarians are not Christians; in other words, that a portion of the denomination known as Unitarian is not Christian, but purely infidel, simple deists. This charge to a certain extent may be true, for we find evidence in this case tending to show that some who call themselves Unitarians claim to believe in the existence of a Supreme Ruler of the universe, and really believe nothing else, but are infidels or deists, and are not entitled to the Christian name any more than the pagans are. They may, in one sense, be Unitarians, just as all Jews and Mohammedans are, but they are not Unitarian Christians, because they do not believe in the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. And that those men who call themselves Unitarians while they are simply deists, and who only assume the name of Unitarians as a cloak to cover their bald infidelity, "are fellowshiped by Unitarians," as the answer charges, if true to any extent, is simply owing to the fact that the denomination has undertaken to go along without any particular creed or established articles of faith by which such men would be excluded; and they are thus of necessity endured in the society and companionship of those who have no sympathy, nor any bond of Christian fellowship or communion, with them. (See Dr. Peabody's deposition). So far as this part of the answer is true, it is simply saying that some who call themselves Unitarians are not Unitarian Christians, but Unitarian infidels. But the term "Unitarian," as descriptive of a religious sect or denomination, is generally and properly used to denote a denomination of Christians, and of that great division of Christians known as Protestants. Dublin case, 38 N.H., before cited; Baird's Religion in America, ch. 3.

The answer also alleges that "Unitarians have no rule of faith or creed of doctrines." In a certain sense, this is true. Unitarian Christians profess to take the Bible as their creed, and allow every person to read and interpret and understand the Bible for himself, according to such light as he has, using his reason and other powers of mind, as best he may, in aiding him to arrive at correct conclusions. But in another sense they do and must have a creed. The church in Dublin had a formal creed, or confession, or articles of faith; and the decision in that case only settles that Unitarians, who believe in such a creed or church covenant as that, are Christians. That decision is not an authority that all who call themselves Unitarians are Christians, without regard to their faith or belief in the doctrines of Christianity. Dublin case, 38 N.H. 459, 460, 466, 468, 571, 572. So the church in Dover had a "covenant," which was to be assented to by all who would unite with them for the benefit of Christian ordinances. This covenant was a creed. They must "believe in Jesus Christ as the Messiah, and accept his religion as a revelation from God, the true guide of . . . faith and rule of . . . duty." Now, a man's creed is what he believes. Trinitarians believe in the trinity or the tri-unity of God. That, so far, is their creed. Unitarians believe in the unity of God. That, so far, is their creed. Each has a creed which necessarily excludes the other. Different creeds constitute the different "sects." Each sect has a particular name, and that makes it a "denomination." A creed may have one article of belief, or many. What makes it a creed is the fact that it is the common belief of a sect,—not its length or its brevity. It would be impossible to have a sect or denomination, unless there were at least some one ground on which they agreed; and, so far as there was a common belief, just so far they would have a creed or a covenant. And the case is not changed, whether the creed contains one article of faith or thirty-nine.

In the Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge, Unitarians are designed as "a class of religionists who hold to the personal unity of God in opposition to the doctrine of the trinity. . . . Unitarians profess to derive their views from Scripture, and to make it the arbiter in all religious questions. . . . In America, Unitarian opinions are much divided upon the point of Christ's preexistence, while, on the other hand, the rejection of the tenet of his vicarious suffering (or suffering as men's substitute), along with that of his supreme deity, appears to be universally characteristic of the sect." See, also, Prof. Palfrey's article on Unitarians, in the American Encyclopædia; also, in the Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge.

A belief in the unity of God, in the Bible as a divine revelation, the ultimate arbiter in all religious questions, and a rejection of the doctrine of the vicarious sufferings of Christ and of his supreme divinity, would seem to be leading articles in their belief or creed, from these authorities. See Dr. Channing's sermon on Unitarian Christianity, 3 Channing's Works, 59; Ellis' Half-Century of the Unitarian Controversy, 48.

If there is any such Unitarianism as the defendants claim, and describe in their answers as having "never been exclusive, sectarian, or limited to Christian worship," it must be a kind of Unitarianism that stands "outside of Christianity," where Mr. Abbot stands. It is not Christian Unitarianism, nor is it Unitarian in the sense in which this word is ordinarily and properly used, denoting a sect or denomination of Christians.

It was not until about the year 1867 that Mr. Abbot's anti-Christian views and doctrines began to be made prominent in his preaching and public teachings. Up to that time, he had been preaching in a way to satisfy the church as well as the society, he being the pastor of both, in the same way that all the preachers before him, to that society, had been. They had been preaching the doctrines of the church, which were those of the society, as a matter of course, which they were assisting the church to promulgate; distinctively Christian doctrines, such as that Jesus Christ was the true Messiah, and that his religion was a revelation from God, which was the true guide of faith and rule of duty. The distinctively Christian ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper had been administered to the church by all of these pastors, so far as appears, from the time when they formed the church, and each "solemnly declared their belief in the gospel of Jesus Christ," and when it was duly pronounced to be "a regular Christian church," down to the time when Mr. Abbot baptized his two children "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," and assented to the declaration "I believe in Jesus Christ as the Messiah, and regard his religion as a revelation from God." During all this time, a period of full forty years, this meeting-house had been used regularly and stately, by regularly ordained ministers of the sect known as Unitarian Christians, in preaching and teaching distinctively Christian doctrines, and in administering the distinctively Christian ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper; such teaching and preaching, and such an administration of Christian ordinances there, as the church desired in order to help them to become what they so much desired in the commencement, to wit, "sincere disciples of Jesus Christ."

To such uses has this church or meeting-house been set apart, and appropriated and consecrated, from its very origin and inception, through the long period of forty years, down to 1867 under the special and particular direction and control of this society of Unitarian Christians. For forty years—as long as the children of Israel wandered in the wilderness, seeking the land of promise—has this trust been administered, and applied to the support and maintenance of the doctrines and ordinances of Christianity, without any variation or cessation, and going back to the erection of the meeting-house, and also to the foundation of the trust, when the founders could see for themselves how the trust was applied and executed, and were satisfied, it would seem, with the way the whole thing was managed, under the direction and control of this society of Christians, to whom the founders of the trust had committed the custody and control of the house.

And, surely, if "courts will resort to the original and long-continued application of a religious charity by the trustees" in order to aid them in giving construction to the instrument which established the charity (see Dublin case); or, if it be true that, "where the original trustees, appointed by the founder of a religious charity or trust, applied the fund to the support of certain religious doctrines, and that application has been long continued and acquiesced in" (id.), a court of equity will not allow such application to be interfered with or changed, unless such change is clearly required by the plainly expressed intention of the donor, then it follows that the court should not allow or suffer this charity or trust now to be diverted, and misapplied to uses directly antagonistic to all those uses and purposes to which it has heretofore been uniformly applied; will not and should not allow this house to be used for the teaching and preaching of doctrines directly subversive of all the fundamental principles of Christianity and of Christianity itself, to whose use it has always heretofore been devoted.

If the Dublin case is to be sustained as an authority, if it is not to be overruled and set aside as of no weight or consequence, it would seem that the questions at issue in this case must be decided in favor of these complainants, on the ground of a long-continued and uninterrupted application of this charity or trust, in a particular way, and for the use and support of the doctrines of Christianity, from the very foundation of the trust, and so down for full forty years, with the full knowledge, assent, and approval of the original founders of the trust, and of everybody interested in the same. We might properly stop here, and order a decree in favor of the complainants; but there are a few other aspects in which it may be well to look at the case.

If we hold, as the weight of authority seems to be, "that the denominational name of a religious society to which or to whose use a donation is made, and the doctrines actually taught therein at the time of the gift and immediately after, and the length of time they continue to be so taught without interruption, may be resorted to, to limit and define the trust in respect to doctrines deemed fundamental," then we should come to the same result, to wit, that these defendants ought to be restrained from using the house for the preaching and promulgating doctrines opposed to Christianity; or, if it be the law that "when the conveyance is merely to the religious corporation by name, with no other designation of its purposes or trusts, the denominational name, in connection with the contemporaneous acts of the corporators, may be a sufficient guide as to the nature of the trust," then we must inevitably reach the same conclusion in favor of the complainants. So, also, upon the ground that "where there is no specific designation in the deed as to the particular tenets or doctrines which it is to be used to advance or support, the denominational name may indicate the nature of the trust, so far as respects doctrines admitted to be fundamental," the same conclusions must be reached; and, finally, if, "when a society of one religious sect or denomination becomes incorporated, with a strict denominational name descriptive of the fundamental doctrines of the sect to which it belongs, it will be presumed that it was constituted for the purpose of advancing the vital doctrines of such sect or denomination"; and if in such case it follows "that the society, or those having control of property held in trust for the benefit of such religious society, should be restrained from applying the property or the use of it to the promotion of tenets or doctrines clearly opposed and adverse to the fundamental principles of the faith and doctrine of the denomination, at the time and immediately after the trust was created," then the injunction prayed for in this case would be granted, as a matter of course, upon the facts proved in evidence, even upon the ground that said Abbot had been employed by said wardens of said Unitarian society, and that by authority of a majority of the members of said Unitarian society, for the time being, acting in good faith, but under a mistaken notion of their powers and duties.

But in this case we find that this Unitarian society had not in any sense elected, or contracted with, or employed said Abbot as their minister or religious teacher, after the first of April, 1868. After that date, when the matter was suggested to him by the wardens or others, Mr. Abbot utterly declined and refused to be employed by said society, or to preach to that society, or to be connected or associated with the society as a society of Unitarian Christians, in the capacity of religious teacher, directly or indirectly, in any manner whatever.

He insisted that, as the society had originally assumed a name, expressing and intended to express and represent the religious sentiments of its members and the system of theology which the society was formed to promulgate and inculcate, they should now, if they had changed their religious sentiments and wished to advocate and disseminate such doctrines as he was preaching, which were antagonistic to all the doctrines and sentiments expressed and represented by the name they had assumed,—antagonistic to all the doctrines of Christianity generally, and of that particular sect of Christians called Unitarian,—that they should change their name and assume one that would be consistent with their present position,—one, at least, that should in some respect represent and express the new doctrines they had embraced and proposed to promulgate; that they were bound, in good faith and common honesty, not to sail under false colors; that they should not seek to teach and disseminate anti-Christian sentiments and doctrines under the name of Christianity; that, like honest men, they should call things by their true names, and not seek, by fraud and false pretences and false names, to advance and inculcate any system of doctrines, however good in themselves, Mr. Abbot might think them to be; and in this we think Mr. Abbot was clearly right.

But, as a society of Unitarian Christians, Mr. Abbot utterly declined and refused to have any connection or association with them as their pastor or religious teacher. Now, the election of a religious teacher, contemplated by the constitution, was one that was to be accompanied by a contract for his support and maintenance. He was to be elected and contracted with. An election of one that could not be had, or of one that would not serve, would amount to nothing. The privilege which the constitution secured to religious societies was the privilege of electing and contracting with, of hiring such religious teacher as they chose to support, for themselves and in their own way. But this society has not elected, contracted with, or employed Mr. Abbot as their preacher or religious teacher in any way since his resignation was tendered and accepted, taking effect April 1, 1868.

The charge in this bill is against all the defendants (except Abbot, and the wardens of the Unitarian society) as claiming to be members of said "First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover," but as being, in fact, members of an independent religious society of which said Francis E. Abbot is the preacher, and against said Abbot as such preacher, and against said York, Folsom, and Horsch, as wardens of the said Unitarian society of Christians. The plaintiffs charge in substance that the defendants have united, and formed an independent society entirely outside and independent of said Unitarian society, and, in fact, antagonistic and hostile to it; and that, as such, they have employed Mr. Abbot as their preacher; and that the wardens of said Unitarian society have, in violation of their duty to said Unitarian society, allowed and encouraged said Abbot and his associates and fellow-disbelievers in Christianity, as such independent society, to occupy the meeting-house of said Unitarian society since said 27th of April; and that said wardens have allowed said Abbot in the pulpit of said house to preach, not to said Unitarian society, but to said independent society; and that said preaching was not according to the views of the denomination of Christians known as Unitarians, but in opposition thereto and to Christianity generally; that the plaintiffs do not know who compose said independent society to which said Abbot claims to be preaching, but believe the same to be made up of said defendants (save said Abbot) and others; and that said wardens of the Unitarian society have assessed the pews in said house, and are proceeding to collect the taxes so assessed of the plaintiffs, and apply the same towards paying for the preaching of said Abbot in said house, not to said Unitarian society, but to another society, whose views and doctrines are hostile to Christianity generally, and to the views and doctrines of Unitarians particularly,—all which, it is alleged, is in violation of the duties of said wardens of said Unitarian society, and in violation and disregard of the rights of these plaintiffs.

In the answer, the defendants (except Abbot) deny that they are members of any independent society, but claim that they are members of said Unitarian society, and that they are Unitarians, and that they employ Mr. Abbot to preach to them in their house, under and by authority of the vote therein set forth concerning the two divisions of said society and their occupancy of the house.

Mr. Abbot's answer is evidently drawn with great care, so as to say nothing in regard to this independent society. Had he been allowed to say anything about it, he would no doubt have told, as in other cases, the plain and simple truth. But this may not have been thought desirable by the other defendants, and so, in his answer, Abbot is put upon safe ground. He admits nothing and denies nothing, but says that for the year 1868 his engagement was made (not with York, Folsom, and Horsch, as the wardens of the Unitarian society, or with anybody who claimed to act for said society, but) with Wallingford, Everett, and Folsom, three of the defendants, "who claimed to represent very many of the other defendants in this proceeding, and some other persons, to preach for them for the term of one year; that his congregation have from Sabbath to Sabbath assembled in said meeting-house, and he has been, by said Wallingford, Everett, and Folsom, directed there to preach; and that he has, in fulfillment of his said contract, conducted public religious worship in said house, etc., claiming or exercising no other rights than are by him set forth in this his answer."

From this, it will be seen that he does not claim to have been employed by the Unitarian society or its wardens, or by anybody acting in its behalf, or that he was preaching to said society, or that he had any authority from said society to preach in their house. He does not deny that his employers and the other defendants, whom they claimed to represent with others, were acting as an independent society in open hostility to said Unitarian society. The non-commitment of this answer is by no means characteristic of Mr. Abbot.*

But what are the facts as disclosed in the evidence? It will be borne in mind that Mr. Abbot, on account of the change in his views while at Dover, and finding that his present views were distasteful to the Unitarian society, had resigned his place as pastor of said society, which resignation had been accepted to take effect April 1, 1868, and that he had withdrawn from and terminated his connection with the American Unitarian society just before that time, and had publicly announced that he was neither a Unitarian nor a Christian, and had preached his farewell sermon to said society March 29, 1868. After this he was engaged and employed by an independent society, to which he preached until the 1st of October of the same year, when he preached his farewell address to said independent society of Dover, which was printed in the Dover Gazette of Oct. 9, 1868, and which has been introduced as evidence in this case, and is not substantially contradicted.

In this address, he says: "When, therefore, I deliberately discarded the Unitarian and Christian names, this step was by no means a matter of words; it meant the standing aloof, albeit in utter solitude, from all Unitarian and distinctively Christian organizations. . . . I resolved, after the expiration of my Unitarian pastorate, to refuse to connect myself again, whether directly or indirectly, with any Unitarian or Christian society. . . . Immediately after the delivery of my farewell sermon, however, a movement started at the church door to retain me as a preacher in Dover, notwithstanding the public position I had taken. The next day, March 30th, my friends in the old society, wholly without my knowledge, went to the parish meeting and elected radical wardens, with authority to supply the Unitarian pulpit as they should think proper. The plan was to invite me to preach to the Unitarian society, not as its settled minister, but simply as its preacher for the present year, it being supposed that this course would leave me perfectly free to occupy my own ground uncommitted to the Unitarian denomination. The new wardens, therefore, invited me to preach in my old pulpit the very next Sunday; but I declined doing so, until I knew precisely what relation I should thereby occupy toward my former society, and what would be its action at the adjourned parish meeting. During this interval, between the first and second parish meetings, I became convinced of two things,—first, that my friends, having got control of the church, were strongly disinclined to form a new society; and, secondly, that the proposed plan would conflict with my determination to stand wholly aloof from the Unitarian sect. At a meeting of my friends, therefore, held at the house of Mr. Wallingford, the evening before the second parish meeting (April 12), I said plainly and emphatically that I could not again become their preacher, unless they should either change the name of the Unitarian society, or else form a new, independent society."

"After a full discussion, my friends concluded, as I was distinctly informed, to accept the second condition I had named, and to form a new and wholly independent society. At the parish meeting next day, after much wrangling, the following resolution was passed: 'Resolved, That the wardens shall employ none other than Unitarian Christians to supply the desk in this house.' . . . The radical wardens at once resigned, conservative wardens were nominated, who refused to serve as such, and the meeting was adjourned a fortnight, for the purpose of then electing wardens who would serve. Thus at the second parish meeting the church passed into the control of the conservatives, and I believe there was, at that time, but one purpose among my friends, namely, to go into a hall, and start outside as an independent society. Meanwhile, a subscription paper had been carried round, with the following heading: 'We, the undersigned, hereby constitute ourselves an "independent society," for the purpose of maintaining free religious principles in Dover; and, in order to carry out this purpose, we agree to pay the sums set opposite our names, for the support of the Rev. Francis Ellingwood Abbot, as our preacher, for the ensuing year.'"

There is proof, from the records of the Unitarian society, "the answer" here referred to was never seen by me till it had been presented to the Court by the counsel in the case.—F. E. A.

society, that the votes which he refers to were passed by that society on the 30th of March and 13th of April, as stated by him. We also have a copy of this subscription paper of the independent society, duly authenticated, attached to a deposition in the case, with the names of the signers. The total subscription amounted to $1,061, which was subscribed by some forty-four different persons, many of whom were not members of the Unitarian society, and some of whom were Jews. (See York's deposition.)

Mr. Abbot continues: "Enough money was pledged on this paper to sustain the movement, and, having made a definite agreement with the leading men concerned in it, I held the first public services of the new society in American Hall, Sunday evening, April 26, and then and there announced the fact of my engagement as preacher to the Independent Society for the year. The next day, April 27, the third parish meeting was held in the church, the former radical wardens were re-elected, . . . and resolutions . . . were passed, assigning the use of the church, to each of the two divisions of said society for one half the time." In consequence of verbal explanations, made at the time, . . . it was universally understood, both by radicals and conservatives, that it was intended to give to the Independent Society the use of the church for half the time. It has been, in virtue of this vote alone, thus understood, that I have conceived myself justified hitherto in preaching in the Unitarian church. If I had for a moment supposed that the audience to which I preached regarded itself, not as a bona fide independent society, but only as the radical portion of the Unitarian society, I never should have consented to stand again in my former pulpit.

"About six weeks after our first services in American Hall, I felt convinced that the Independent Society must either complete its legal organization, or else come under the suspicion of being a nonentity, a mere blind for deceiving the public in regard to the real nature of our movement. Accordingly, early in June, I requested you to take such steps as were necessary to complete the legal organization of our society. You promptly voted to do so, and appointed a committee of three to report on this subject at an adjourned meeting."

The following is the official record of this adjourned meeting:—

DOVER, June 9, 1868.

"At a meeting of 'The First Independent Religious Society' of the city of Dover, for the promotion of free religious principles, Zimri S. Wallingford was chosen moderator; and Thaddeus P. Cressey, secretary pro tempore. Jasper H. York, from the committee on permanent organization, reported the names of Zimri S. Wallingford, Lucias Everett, Josiah B. Folsom, for wardens, and Thaddeus P. Cressey, clerk."

"On motion of Mr. Everett to proceed to the choice [CONTINUED ON PAGE 297.]

Poetry.

ATHEISM.

"There is no God," the wicked saith,
"And truly it's a blessing;
For what he might have done with us
It's better only guessing."

"There is no God," a youngster thinks,
"Or really, if there may be,
He surely didn't mean a man
Always to be a baby."

"Whether there be," the rich man thinks,
"It matters very little;
For I and mine, thank somebody,
Are not in want of victual."

Some others also to themselves,
Who scarce so much as doubt it,
Think there is none, when they are well,
And do not think about it.

But country-folks who live beneath
The shadow of the steeple;
The parson and the parson's wife,
And mostly married people;

Youths green and happy in first love,
So thankful for illusion;
And men caught out in what the world
Calls guilt and first confusion;

And almost every one when age,
Disease, and sorrow strike him,—
Incline to think there is a God,
Or something very like him.

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 12.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

E. L. Winham, $3.50; Thos. Dugan, $3.20; J. H. McEvoy, $2.10; Rolfe & Bergen, $1; M. S. Greene, $5.20; J. M. Westwater, $3.74; E. Z. Penfield, $3; E. G. Burnett, $7; Hiram Blanchard, $6.40; N. E. Mulford, $1.50; Cephas Shelburne, $1; T. S. Howland, $4.54; Fred B. Wood, $2.20; A. B. Braley, $1; Oash, $4; W. E. Carpenter, 65 cents; L. E. C. Garvin, $1; B. F. Underwood, 67 cents; Dr. C. G. Davis, $3.20; Rob't G. Titcomb, $5; N. C. Nash, $6.40; Rob't R. Turnbull, $3.20; J. T. Thornton, $3.20; J. S. Hill, $3.20; Kersch & Schless, $3.34; R. C. Bassett, $7; R. B. Whyte, $3; Dr. J. E. Line, $12.54; C. N. Overbaugh, $3.20; H. E. Parsons, $3.20; A. S. Wheeler, $3; C. B. Hoffman, $1.70; J. Villa Blake, $9; J. T. Frey, $12.80; F. W. Christern, $25; J. K. Pearson, $7.74; Wilber J. Squire, $6; S. C. Gale, $3; M. W. Tomlinson, 50 cents; Jno. P. Bailey, $7; Susan A. Tyrell, $8; A. V. Lincoln, $4; S. R. Koehler, $3.20; Dr. Sam'l Young, $2.20; Carl Edelheim, $6.40; Nath'l Little, $5; Mrs. Mary F. Smith, $3.20; Chas. C. Lane, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 17, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases; i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are fitted by general capacity and special knowledge to understand it best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS TO THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION

FOR THE CONTINUED PUBLICATION OF THE INDEX.

LUCRETIA MOTT, Philadelphia	$50.00
JOHN C. HAYNES, Boston	200.00
Mrs. C. F. CURTIS, Boston	10.00
Mrs. C. A. TUCKER, New Bedford	10.00
JACOB HOFFNER, Cincinnati	5.00
PLEDGES.
F. W. CHRISTERN, New York, annually for 5 years,	25.00
R. B. STONE, Bradford, Pa., annually for 5 years...	10.00
SETH HUNT, Northampton, annually for 5 years...	5.00
S. G. MORGAN, New Bedford, annually for 5 years...	25.00
G. F. MATTHEWS, New Bedford, 10th annual assessment on INDEX stock.	10.00
JOHN W. CHADWICK, Brooklyn, 10th annual assessment on INDEX stock.	10.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F.R.A.

NOTE.—At the recent annual meeting of the Free Religious Association, the receipts from contributions and membership fees amounted to $226.25. W. J. P.

"THE GREAT WORLD-PULSE."

In our recent journey to Toledo, we beguiled the tedium of railroad-travelling by reading that noble story, A Fool's Errand. Whoever has at heart the permanent interests of the United States, as one great nation and not as a mere accidental and unstable aggregate of many small nations, will find abundant instruction and food for thought in the pages of this most manly book. It has far deeper objects in view than the telling of a pleasant tale, though that is not forgotten or left ill executed; it aims to show, and indeed shows, that "Reconstruction was a failure so far as it attempted to unify the nation, to make one people of what had been one only in name before the convulsion of civil war." The pages of the forty-fifth chapter, in which "Wisdom and Folly Meet Together," are worthy of profoundest study by every true patriot, by every one who believes that liberalism is the ideal basis of the United States government, and, above all, by every one who believes that in America the great social, political, and religious problem of humanity is destined to be at last practically solved. These dozen pages lead naturally and irresistibly to those fundamental principles of nationality which are tersely summed up in the Rochester Platform. Wisely indeed does "the Fool" declare:—

"The Nation nourished and protected slavery. The fruitage of slavery has been the ignorant freedman, the ignorant poor white-man, and the arrogant master. The impotence of the freedman, the ignorance of the poor-white, the arrogance of the master, are all the result of national power exercised in restraint of free thought, free labor, and free speech. Now let the Nation undo the evil it has permitted and encouraged. Let it educate those whom it made ignorant, and protect those whom it made weak. It is not a matter of favor to the black, but of safety to the Nation. Make the spelling-book the sceptre of national power. Let the Nation educate the colored man and the poor-white because the Nation held them in bondage, and is responsible for their education; educate the voter because the Nation cannot afford that he should be ignorant. Do not try to shuffle off the responsibility nor cloak the danger. Honest ignorance in the masses is more to be dreaded than malevolent intelligence in the few. It furnished the rank and file of rebellion, and the prejudice-blinded multitudes who made the Policy of Repression possible. Poor-Whites, Freedmen, Ku-Klux, and Bulldozers are all alike the harvest of ignorance. The Nation cannot afford to grow such a crop. . . .

"The South—that pseudo-South which has the power—does not wish this thing to be done to her people, and will oppose it with might and main. If done at all, it must be done by the North—by the Nation moved, instigated, and controlled by the North, I mean—in its own self-defence. It must be an act of sovereignty, an exercise of power. The Nation expected the liberated slave to be an ally of freedom. It was altogether right and proper that it should desire and expect this. But it made the fatal mistake of expecting the freedman to do successful battle on his part of the line, without training or knowledge. The mistake must be remedied. As to the means, I feel sure that, when the Nation has smarted enough for its folly, it will find a way to undo the evil, whether the State-Rights Moloch stand in the way, or not."

These are premises whose conclusion is the Rochester Platform. The Constitution of the United States creates a SECULAR NATION; and "natural morality" makes it the imperative duty of a secular nation, as such, to educate and protect all its individual citizens, without distinction of creed, race, color, or sex. Only on these fundamental ethical necessities can a State totally separated and emancipated from the Church be grounded or exist. Liberalism or secularism cannot possibly remain a private affair of the individual; its essential nature is to be universal, and the individual cannot imbibe its spirit or feel its power without becoming baptized with its universality. Hence the irresistible tendency of a generous liberalism to take on the form of practical endeavors for the development of such a nationality as shall give full effect to the ethical necessities above named; and hence the origin of the Liberal League movement, now distorted and aborted by having fallen into the management of minds too limited and gross to comprehend its original spirit, ideas, or objects. But, notwithstanding the ignominious indifference of the liberals to this destruction of the noblest, grandest, and most promising liberal movement ever yet initiated in America, and notwithstanding their temporary submission to self-appointed guides who are daily sinking their cause deeper and deeper into the mire, it will yet become the mission of liberalism, purified at last by its own experience of mistake, disaster, and shame, to take up the great problem of Reconstruction, and magnificently to solve it. The principles of the Rochester Platform are surely destined to formulate the future of the Great Republic, and to make America the hope, joy, and salvation of the world.

One little sentence of the Fool's Errand respecting the hero of the story, who is ironically styled "the Fool," yet whose "folly" is only another name for the transcendent wisdom of ideas, strikes the keynote of all noble liberalism:—

"His heart had throbbed in harmony with the great world-pulse in every one of the grand purposes with which it had swelled during those years."

"Harmony with the great world-pulse" is precisely that which makes the greatness of every individual strong enough to rise above the suffocating atmosphere of Individualism. Only by this harmony can the pettiness of self-absorption be overcome, and the soul be clothed in the grandeur of universality. A new conception of liberalism is growing out of Free Religion, in that the latter surpasses the limitations of Transcendentalism and grounds itself on reverence for the intellectual and moral experience of the human race, as the only revelation of Universal Nature which science strengthens and confirms. Through this enlarged and exalted conception of its own nature, liberalism is slowly becoming aware of its imperative duty to the nation and to the world—aware that it must yet assume unquestioned leadership in the social, political, and moral evolution of America, and aware that this leadership, if defeated, will prove to be the defeat of the whole American experiment and of all the world-wide interests that hinge upon its success. The "great world-pulse"—what can Individualism know of that? Yet that is the mightiest fact of the present, the loftiest prophecy of the future. Free Religion is charged with a duty to mankind so comprehensive and so vast, that all who enter into the movement for its propagation must rise to the level of that duty in all its fulness, or miserably fail in an undertaking for which they will be proved incompetent. The essential work of Free Religion is partly individual and local, but still more national and cosmopolitan. For over ten years THE INDEX has labored to advance that work, so conceived; and we do not believe that its labor has been all in vain. Yet that great work is still but little more than begun, and its further advancement is the supreme responsibility now resting upon us all. Let each and every one of us reconsecrate himself to the sublime task, according to his own opportunity and power! And let each heart, more profoundly than ever before, "throb in harmony with the great world-pulse!"

THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE. ANOTHER YEAR TO ITS AGE.

It will gratify the readers of THE INDEX, I am sure, to know that this interesting and noble product of ideal liberalism has just closed the fourth year of its existence in a more vigorous and prosperous condition than ever before. The recent death of Mr. Seligman, its president, was a most serious loss to it in many respects. He was eminently worthy of all that has been said in his praise. Wise of head and generous of heart, the simple, unostentatious friend of the inspiring leader of the new enterprise in the great city, the bountiful coöperator in its benevolent aims and supporter of its cause, he will be greatly missed for a long time to come.

The closing lecture of Dr. Adler, which will be published in the first number of the new series of THE INDEX, though toned with sadness through the influence of this bereavement, was full of cheer and encouragement. The cause, it was declared, was too grand and momentous for despair at the loss of single individuals, whoever they might be. Tears were due to those who had fallen, loving tributes and affectionate memories; but with these came also the word to close up the ranks, and march onward to new victories and even greater achievements.

The experiment entered upon last fall of transferring the delivery of Dr. Adler's lectures to Chickering Hall, though it caused no little apprehension at the time, owing especially to the great distance of the hall from that part of the city where the majority of the congregation resided, has proved a fortunate change. The attendance has increased in proportion to the greater accommodation of the place of meeting. Chickering Hall possesses the capacity to seat twelve hundred and fifty persons, and the average congregations for the season are estimated to have been one thousand,—congregations, let me add, of wide-awake, earnest, intelligent people, of mixed nationalities, eager for the most thorough discussion of the profoundest questions of life and the latest word of science and knowledge; composed, very largely, of persons immersed in the sharp competitions of money-getting in the great metropolis, yet held to the strictest standard of unselfishness and morality.

There has also been a steady growth of membership. The number of members of the society at the beginning of the year was three hundred and seventeen: it is now four hundred and twenty-five. Here it may be well to mention a peculiarity of the society in respect to the admission of members. The lectures of Prof. Adler are free to every one, with the liberty of contributing to the support of them, if disposed. But it is not so of membership. This is a sacred enclosure, into which only certain persons can enter. It is not enough, as is the case with liberal societies generally, for a person to express a desire for such a connection. The applicant must submit references of character, to be acted upon by a committee appointed for the purpose; and, unless these are satisfactory, he is rejected. This occurs frequently. It is determined that the moral tone of the society shall preponderate over every other consideration. Its financial condition has continued excellent. The income from the fees of members for the year has amounted to $10,000. There has been, in addition to this, the handsome sum of $17,500 contributed to what is termed the relief works of the society, or for purposes of charity. Of this last-mentioned amount, $10,000 was a gift of the late Mr. Seligman to Mr. Adler, to be used for the objects just referred to at his discretion. The relief works include the regular employment of two trained nurses, graduates of the School for Nurses, at liberal compensation, among the sick and destitute. These cooperate with the city physicians in their respective districts. The Free Kindergarten is another interesting activity of this branch of the society's work. It contains now one hundred and twenty-five children, gathered from the poorest families, who are kindly clothed,—so far as this is needed,—fed, and taught, and generally cared for every day. When we visited this gathering of little ones, a short time since, the noon lunch was being served, which all partook of in gay spirits and with a hearty relish. We were shown a closet well filled with children's shoes and other articles of apparel, some new and some second-hand, the latter the offering of thoughtful and sympathetic donors.

It was noticeable how much soap and water, a brush and comb and clean dresses, do towards wiping out social distinctions. Many of these children with their bright faces and tidy appearance might have been easily supposed to be from homes of wealth and comfort. They were frequently even more tractable and winning than the pampered children of luxury and indulgence. The society has acquired greatly increased facilities for the prosecution of its work, during the past year, in the possession of a large building which it has procured, and occupied, as the centre of its various operations. It is here that the Free Kindergarten has its quarters, and that the committees, classes, and different branches of the society are accustomed to hold their meetings. Such is the brilliant showing of this most successful example of organized liberalism, in accordance with the freest and ripest thought, the most practical and philanthropic effort, and the purest spirit of the time; thus presenting even in its infancy, when compared with religious societies in general, all the vitality and effective energy of a flourishing maturity. Although the circumstances under which it has arisen have been in very important particulars peculiarly its own, and cannot be those of similar efforts elsewhere, may it not, nevertheless, be regarded as the type of the promise and possibility of the movement it so grandly represents?

D. H. C.

THE STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The following resolutions were unanimously passed at the Ninth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of THE INDEX Association, held at Toledo, Ohio, June 5, 1880:—

Voted, That we, the Stockholders of the Index Association, hereby cordially ratify and approve the entire action taken by the Board of Directors in donating and transferring THE INDEX to the Free Religious Association, according to the terms and on the condition named in their vote of donation.

Voted, That, under the circumstances set forth in the various reports submitted to this meeting, the action thus taken and ratified is, in our judgment, the best way to secure fulfilment of the main purpose for which this Association was originally formed; namely, to publish a first-class weekly journal devoted to Free Religion.

Voted, That . . . we extend to the Free Religious Association our hearty sympathy in their labors for the common cause of Free Religion, and especially wish for THE INDEX in their hands a long-continued life of prosperity and usefulness.

Voted, That we extend our cordial thanks to the Directors of the past and preceding years for their faithful administration of the trust reposed in them.

Voted, That we also extend our thanks to the other numerous friends of the Association for their sympathy and active coöperation during a period of nearly nine years, and express the hope that they will ungrudgingly give the same sympathy and coöperation to the Free Religious Association in their work of continuing the publication of THE INDEX.

AN INFAMOUS PROPOSITION.

If the signature of the following letter is genuine, it will be a merited chastisement of the writer to expose him to the public contempt which he has richly earned:—

NEW YORK, May 24, 1880.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Mr. D. M. Bennett has done you some injury in your intercourse with him; and if you want to get "square," if you can make it worth my while, I will furnish you or Ellis or Bundy with the data.

Yours,

J. B. SHINN.

Address: Station D.

The scoundrel who has presumed to address us in this fashion assumes that we desire to revenge ourselves on Bennett for "some injury" which he also assumes that Bennett has done to us; and he assumes that we will pay him for furnishing information which may minister to this desire of revenge. All these assumptions are as false as they are impudent. Bennett has not "injured" us, though he has tried his best to do so; it is not in the power of such as he to "injure" us. He has indeed injured the liberal movement by thrusting himself before the public as its representative, and by helping to betray the National Liberal League to the repealers and free-lovers; and the only reason we have had for noticing him at all has been a desire to protect the liberal cause from the injury thus inflicted upon it. But we have never had, and do not now have, the slightest desire to "get square" with him for anything he has done to us. Neither he nor those who have sold themselves to please him by doing his dirty work can inflict any injury whatever on us, or arouse the least desire for retaliation; we leave them to run their course and reap its natural reward in the contempt and disgust of the liberal public they have imposed upon so long. As for the precious personage who wrote the above letter, and who is either betraying his own associates or else laying a trap for us at their instigation, we make no answer to him but what we here say to everybody.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

IT IS SAID that Bret Harte's lectures in England are putting money in his purse.

AN APPRECIATIVE ESTIMATE of the literary work of M. Renan can be found in the last Fortnightly Review, from the pen of Mr. George Saintsbury.

JOHN BROUGHAM, the well-known Irish comedian, is dead. His funeral took place last week from "the little church around the corner," in New York.

MR. CHRISTOPHER P. CRANCH, the artist, poet, and littérateur, has gone to Europe for a year with his family. The good wishes and love of many go with him.

WHEN VOLTAIRE was told that a-g-u-e was pronounced ague, and p-l-a-g-u-e plague, he said he wished the ague would take one-half the English language and the plague the other half.

MR. GOUGH SAYS that a large proportion of English clergymen are now total abstinence men, whereas a few years ago they were opposed, as a body, to the disuse of wine as a beverage with meals.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD was in Boston a few days since. It is pleasant to know that this able and excellent representative of liberalism meets with deserved appreciation. His lecture engagements will occupy all his time for months to come.

D. M. BENNETT is again holding out his hat to his constituency. It is not for the "Defence Fund" this time, but to go to Europe. Bennett, while accustomed to sit in judgment upon the clergy, exemplifies all their weaknesses without any of their virtues.

A VERDICT of $900 damages has been rendered against Mrs. John Drew, for the act of one of the employes of the Arch Street Theatre in ejecting a colored man and his wife from the building. It was claimed that the woman had been seriously injured.

MR. THOMAS W. BICKNELL, editor of the New England Journal of Education, has gone to England, as a delegate to the Centennial Anniversary of the Sunday School Society to be held in London. He also expects to be present at the Educational Conference that is to be held in Belgium this summer.

THE FOLLOWING exchange of courtesies is reported: Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, Mrs. Saxon, and Mrs. Slocum, who addressed the New York Assembly committee in favor of Woman Suffrage, called at the executive chamber, and presented Governor Cornell, on behalf of the Woman's Suffrage Association of the State, with a gold pen, as a mark of approval of his course in signing the bill allowing women to vote for school officers and to hold the position of school trustees. Governor Cornell, after accepting the gold pen, presented the ladies the pen with which he signed the bill in question.

THE American Israelite thinks well of Moses. This is what it has to say of him: "How do Jesus, Mohammed, Luther, and others compare with Moses? We say, in some respects, they compare with Moses as the fresco painter with the architect of a grand cathedral, or as the artistical statue with a marble mountain, or like one of your artificial fountains with the colossal mountain stream. The gorgeous structure erected by Moses unites in itself beauty, strength and wisdom to such an eminent harmony that all attempts at ornamentation can only mar or hide its real eminence. Give us Moses with the privilege to understand him in the pure light of reason, and we can well do without all redeemers, reformers, and fresco painters."

FOREIGN.

GENERAL TURR, the Hungarian patriot, has addressed a long and interesting letter to Mr. Gladstone, in which he refers to the Premier's "immense services to liberty," and to his being one of the warmest promoters of the reunion of the Ionian Isles with Greece.

A CENTENARIAN ex-soldier, who recently died in a Russian village, continued his business of tailor till death, though he had been blind for forty years. His sense of touch was so acute that he could distinguish different bank-notes. He used to thread his needle by means of his tongue.

IT IS NOT GENERALLY known that one of Mr. Bright's duties as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is to appoint the preachers at the Savoy Chapel. There is reason to believe that some clergymen will now be invited to preach in that historic pulpit who were carefully excluded from it under the Tory régime.

THE ORGAN of the German Social Democrats, published at Zürich, contains a declaration of the party leaders, excluding Herr Hassellmann, the Social Democrat, in consequence of his having expressed regret in the Reichstag that in Germany Socialists did not identify themselves with Nihilism, which declaration has severely injured the party interests.

THE REMAINS of Vasco da Gama, the famous Portuguese discoverer, and of Camoens, the poet who celebrated Da Gama's deeds in his epic The Lusiad, were removed, June 9, across the river Tagus to their final resting-place in the monastery of Belem. The occasion was made one of great public rejoicing throughout Portugal.

UNDER THE PRESIDENCY of Mr. Joseph Arch, the ninth annual council of the National Agricultural Laborers' Union was held at Northampton recently, when the usual business was transacted. In the course of the conference, the Mayor attended, and, after congratulating the delegates on the excellent condition of the union, gave them a cordial welcome to the borough. A deputation from the Radical Association also attended. In the evening, a town's meeting was held, when addresses were delivered by Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Arch. Resolutions in favor of the county franchise and the amendment of the land laws were unanimously carried.

WE HAVE NOT by any means heard the last of the Bradlaugh case. Whether the committee reports favorably to him or not, Sir H. Drummond Wolff will renew his opposition, and a vote of the House will probably exclude Mr. Bradlaugh. Then many things may happen. He will most likely insist upon taking the oath, in which case he may be sued for the penalty of £500 for every day he sits, or he may be ordered into custody. In any case, the law courts will very possibly find some work to do. The only sensible course would be the abolition of the oath; but the sensible course is not always the one pursued, even by the collective wisdom of the nation. —Weekly Dispatch.

FRIENDS OF RELIGIOUS EQUALITY.—Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., on Friday, May 29, presided at a breakfast held at the City Terminus Hotel, the object of which was to afford an opportunity to the friends of religious equality in the metropolis of meeting the supporters of that principle who have just been returned to Parliament. Among the speakers were Mr. Baxter, M.P., Mr. Hugh Mason, M.P., Mr. Watkin Williams, M.P., Mr. Woodall, M.P., Mr. Leatham, M.P., and Mr. Bryce, M.P. A resolution was carried, offering the congratulations of the meeting to the friends of religious equality throughout the country on the accession to their parliamentary strength, which has resulted from the recent appeal to the constituencies; and expressing the hope that preparations will be made for renewed exertions, by means of which that strength will be wisely used in furtherance of their aims.

SPEAKING AT the annual meeting of the Society for the Conversion of the Jews, Canon Ryle of Liverpool said he felt it a high honor, as it was a great pleasure, to him to be allowed to stand on that platform in support of the claims of that excellent society. He had long been its friend, and hoped to be not less a friend by and by, when he removed to the great city of Liverpool, in which he hoped to live and die. If they wished to know how it was that God cast off his chosen people for a time, and scattered them among the nations, with whom they never fused, as the Saxons, Danes, and Normans did with the British and became one race of Englishmen, let them read the Word of God and learn the reason why. The infidelity of the Sadducees, the ritualism of the Pharisees, the indifference and formalism of the whole nation, ruined the Jewish Church and made the Jews what they were to this time. The Jewish Church was a warning beacon to the Church of England. It showed that beautiful forms, glowing vestments, grand ceremonial, smoking incense, and a highly decorated place of worship would not keep a church alive, if it did not keep and maintain in the first and highest place the truth as it was in Christ Jesus. [Cheers.] A study of the Jewish question would help to arm them against one of the most tremendous evils which was now afflicting the Christian Churches; namely, that of popery.—Liverpool Mercury.

THE DECREES of the French Government against non-authorized religious orders are still affording our lively neighbors something to talk about. Of course, the Bishops have remonstrated with President Grévy; but it is certain that the State is determined to admit of no compromise. M. Ferry, in his recent speech in the Vosges, rightly declared that "the key of the future of our Republic is the education of youth." This education has hitherto been almost monopolized by the religious orders, and it is evident that the Catholic school is not exactly the place wherein children would be likely to learn their duties as citizens of a Republic. The Congregational clergy are fanatically anti-democratic, and there can be no doubt that M. Ferry has boldly—ay, even audaciously—come forward as the champion of the French Democracy. "If modern society were to permit itself to be bound and tied by an infinite number of associations and affiliations, we should be like Gulliver at the mercy of the Lilliputians." It is strange that both in the French Republic and in despotic Germany two patriotic statesmen should have felt it necessary to enter upon a struggle with Ultramontanism. The strength of Romanism—as with all Supernaturalisms—lies in its power over the schools. "The child's the father of the man," and the direction of the future history of mankind is imparted in elementary schools. Hence we are glad to know that M. Ferry can say of his brother ministers, "We are moderate, but resolved."—Secular Review.

THE PASSION-PLAY.—Lloyd, the correspondent of a contemporary, writing from Munich on Tuesday, says: "The dress rehearsal of the Ober-Ammergau Passion-Play for 1880 took place on Sunday last. The audience consisted of some two thousand persons, who came from the neighboring villages, as well as from Munich, Vienna, etc. Unfortunately, the weather was unfavorable, to say the least. We had, in fact, snow and rain all day. In consequence of the bad weather, the performance was cut in half, and the second half was given yesterday. The old actors were ill, the children were half-frozen, the audience was miserable, and the village was one large pool of mud,—a perfect Slough of Despond. If visitors take my advice, they will make Munich their headquarters. They will consult their own comfort, too, if they bring some warm clothing with them. At Munich, they can lay in a store of some light refreshment, just such as they would select for a picnic, leave by early trains, and return at night. As to staying in the village, that is not to be thought of on any account. The place is quite unequal to the accommodation of the crowds which are thronging to it. The prices may be characterized in a very few words. To put it mildly, they are simply absurd. Harvest time, it is quite obvious the people think, has come, and they mean to make money. The performance, notwithstanding the drawbacks above alluded to, was singularly impressive. It must at the same time be admitted as a somewhat strange incongruity that the audience was not reverential in its demeanor. During the representation, a good deal of beer was consumed. The play has been thoroughly well advertised in every German city. A word in conclusion as to the route. From Munich to Murnau by rail, the distance is forty-six miles, and the journey occupies three or four hours. From Murnau by road to the village, it is a three hours' drive, there being some fourteen miles of ground to get over."—Lloyd's Weekly.

CHARLES DICKENS AS A SPIRITUALIST.—TO THE EDITOR OF FREETHOUGHT: Sir,—As Mr. George Lacy has opened in your correspondence columns the question, "Was Charles Dickens a spiritualist?" may I be permitted to offer a few words on the subject? As a devoted admirer of Dickens' genius, and a long-time student of his works, I feel tolerably safe in asserting that, whatever may be the success of Mr. Lacy's "method of procedure" in proving the "Spiritualistic" of the great author's faith, there are no indications in any of his extant writings that he himself was by any means a Spiritualist par excellence. He had no faith in what modern Christian and Materialist scoffers would call "dancing tables and vibrating floors." At the same time, I believe he may fairly be claimed as a Spiritualist in the sense in which Mr. Lacy employs that term. During the early part of 1869, I was honored with the acquaintance of Mr. Dickens, and on one occasion, in the course of a conversation relating to my experiences in India, I had an opportunity of learning his appreciation of the astounding wonders of occultism, of which I had, during my sojourn in the East, acquired some knowledge, and some of which experience I was reciting in Mr. Dickens' hearing. The precise language in which he embodied his remarks I cannot now reproduce, but it was very much as follows: "Magic I can credit to the extent of persons being unconsciously placed under a spell and charmed into believing that they have witnessed things unparalleled; but, in the genuine reality of such utterly supernatural and law-defying occurrences as you relate, I find it impossible to put confidence. They seem wrong, impossible, and absurd." Nevertheless, I received from Mr. Dickens' conversation the impression that he had an unflinching faith in a future life, and the possibility of the people of this earth obtaining at times glimpses of a brighter beyond. Yours, etc.,

GEO. LEWIS, Ph.D., B.A., F.P.S.

ST. DAVID STREET, FITZROY, MELBOURNE.

Communications.

A VISIT TO MR. HOLYOAKE IN LONDON.

Close to where the Strand merges into Fleet Street, at the point where Temple Bar stood until recently to mark the limits of the city of London, Thamesward runs Essex Street,—a short, narrow street, ending with a wall pierced by an archway, from which a winding stone staircase leads a bewildered stranger down to the embankment, close to where the fine statue of John Stuart Mill is erected. At No. 22 in this little street, in the heart of London and yet secluded from the din and roar of its traffic, are the offices of the Newcastle Chronicle, some other offices of lawyers and architects, and then over them all the London home of the founder of Secularism, and the historian of Coöperation, Mr. George Jacob Holyoake.

As he received us at the head of the staircase, he playfully pointed to the new lofty building of the School Board close by, which has shut off the fine view of the river he used to enjoy,—an example of knowledge curtailing discursive vision.

Our call was made in winter, the murky, foggy winter of London, so dispiriting to one who has been reared in the crisp clear air of North America; but we were greeted in the sitting-room with that rarity in England, a warm, cheerful stove with a little kettle upon it, puffing like a miniature locomotive anxious to be freed. Over the mantel and upon the walls before us were some interesting works of art and memorials of friendship. An exquisite and truthful bust of Voltaire; portraits of Lord Lorne and his royal bride, painted by Mr. Holyoake's brother, an eminent artist; a photograph from Garibaldi; and in a small neat frame this from the rugged sage of Chelsea:—

"Do the duty nearest hand."

T. CARLYLE.

For a moment we permitted our host's extreme generosity to drop out of our consciousness, and we admired too warmly, as it proved, a statuette of Cromwell. The next day, carefully papered up, that statuette was delivered at our lodgings in Norfolk Street hard by; and had our special admiration been fixed upon anything else within the walls of Mr. Holyoake's apartments, even to the stove itself, there would without doubt have been a transfer to Norfolk Street of the same. The shelves of the bookcases, placed conveniently near the desk, were laden with many choice volumes, not a few being presentation copies from authors of world-wide honor. The tables and chairs were strewn with all the raw material of the literary man, newspapers, statistics, reports, and notes,—must we rudely say it?—somewhat in want of what Martha in Norfolk Street used to call a "tidying up."

In conversation, Mr. Holyoake is charming. He has stores of information, so ample and drawn upon with so much readiness and humor that his visitors are often attracted to stay longer than a conscientious regard for the industry of their host should permit. He has seen during his lifetime reforms of all kinds advance so rapidly that he is filled with hope for the future. He has seen the laws relating to land vastly improved, the suffrage extended, national education established, and coöperation, from a feeble cause, sustained by a few workmen, become a power in the land, numbering half a million in its membership, and making its influence felt in Parliament and the press. This and much more of progress he has seen, and not seen merely, but done a worthy part to bring about. By all fair means of enlightenment, on the platform or through the press, he has helped on the victory of freedom over privilege, of common sense over superstition, of association over ruthless competition. Notwithstanding the unpopularity of his opinions on matters theological and political, his sincere enthusiasm for humanity and his sound wisdom as to the means of removing social ills and burdens have secured him friends among the highest and best circles in England. Warm churchmen who hate secularism are glad to have his counsel to aid their efforts in bridging the great gulf between surfeited idleness and needy industry; and strong adherents to crown and sceptre, who would frown at his republicanism, are pleased in their benevolent enterprises to avail themselves of his wide practical experience and luminous judgment.

Mr. Holyoake's material fortunes have never been other than very modest. A few years ago, when his eyesight failed, his necessities led to a public testimonial being offered him. The sum of $11,000 was collected and invested for his benefit. The subscription list exhibits many names eminent in science, letters, and business, as well as the names of many of the coöperative societies which he has done so much to found and direct. After undergoing a critical operation, his vision gradually returned; and he has been enabled to resume his literary work with almost all his former facility: still he prefers dictating to an amanuensis to using the pen himself. When we called upon him, he was engaged writing an article for the Nineteenth Century on his visit to America last year. That visit has impressed him with the conviction that the chief remedy for the poverty of the English working-classes is not Battle, but Escape,—emigration even more than reform. Twice it was our good fortune to hear him deliver addresses in which he eloquently depicted the opportunities which this broad continent affords the intelligent and enterprising worker to avoid the chafing and withering conditions of life in the Old World. Without being unmindful of the imperfections and crudeness in the methods and working of our government machinery, he everywhere throughout the Union saw a decided superiority in the intelligence and independence of our people over the masses in Great Britain, brought up as they are under an established church and a hereditary peerage, almost predestined in the appropriation of land and place to remain, as the catechism phrases it, "in that state of life to which it has pleased God to call them." Mr. Holyoake's mission in America was to obtain from headquarters at Washington and Ottawa complete and trustworthy information as to available fields for emigration, so that a farmer, stock-raiser, or mechanic, before exchanging the New World for the Old, might be able to make an intelligent choice, unbiassed by the officious utterances of land companies or railroad agents. He showed us some very beautiful maps of the Western States and Territories published by the Washington authorities, intended for distribution by the Coöperative Guild. Talk long continued mad us at last very hungry; and so through the quaint courts of the Temple, skirting the tomb of Goldsmith and the church where the crusaders in their grim sepulchres are waiting for the resurrection, we found our way to the Cock to discuss a chop. Then some more talk, and we said "good-bye" to as able, kindly, and just a man as we can ever hope to meet, however lengthened out our days may be.

MONTREAL, May, 1880.

VIATOR.

LORIS MELIKOFF—NIHILISM.

THE CURSE OF RUSSIA.—ITS AUDACITY AND INGENUITY.—ITS HOLD UPON RUSSIAN YOUTH.—PASSION AND BEAUTY ITS MINISTERS.—THE END OF ALL.

Loris Melikoff, in other words a nobleman from Loris, has a hard task set him. But, unless he is falsely estimated, he is the only man in Russia equal to the occasion. A Russian proverb says that an Armenian is cleverer, sharper than ten Jews, and that one Jew is equal to ten Christians. And those who know him say that Count Loris Melikoff is the cleverest Armenian living. It is certain that, in the eyes of the people he is called upon to govern, he is at once feared and respected. He is not a wooden-headed brute like Gourko, nor merely a strict soldier like Tottleben, whose reign of terror in Odessa will be written in letters of blood in Russian history; but a keen, sagacious man, liberally inclined and with plenty of common-sense. During his rule at Charkow, Nihilism disappeared from his province, owing to the wise measures he adopted. One incident in his career there is worth noticing, as giving a strong proof of his tact. While taking a walk late one evening he was rudely jostled by a student, who was strongly suspected of being chief of the Nihilists in Charkow. The general stopped the young man and asked him if he knew what he was doing. The student replied that he only knew that he was drunk as he could be. The general reprimanded him, warning him to be careful in the future, and so dismissed him. Shortly afterwards the rector of the university heard the story, and, thinking to curry favor in high quarters, expelled the student in disgrace, and then hastened to Loris Melikoff to receive his reward. He got it, too, but not as he expected; for the general said: "Now you have chosen to interest yourself in my affairs, so I will do the same by you." He then dismissed the rector from his position, ordered that the student should be again reinstated, and thus became in a day a hero in the eyes of the most dangerous part of the population—the students. Henceforth they regarded him as a friend, not as an oppressor.

In an article about Russia and the Russians, Leroy-Beaulieu notices a remarkable trait in the Russian character; namely, the passion for excelling everything Occidental. This is quite true. Praise the amiability of a Frenchman in presence of a Russian, and he will smile derisively; for he brings amiability to a much higher point! Speak of the profound learning of the Germans, he will turn his back on you; for who is more learned than himself? Describe the diplomatic astuteness of the Italians, he will shrug his shoulders and be silent; for he is the cleverest diplomat of them all. And, in a certain degree, he is right; if he wishes to be, the Russian is in fact an angel, or a dictionary, or a snake—everything better than his predecessors and patterns; the old grumblers in Europe—everything in an exaggerated degree. This extraordinary tendency to overdo everything European is seen in the black art of the conspiracies and secret societies. What was hitherto considered as terrible—the conspiracies of Babeuf, of General Mallet, the mysteries of the Carbonari and the Mafia—is simply child's play in comparison with the horrible wonders which a hellish Vehme is producing in the North. Unite the intriguing skill of Eugène Scribe with the gloomy phantasy of Eugène Sue, a writer in Neue Freie Presse goes on to say, and you will have nothing approaching the shameful monstrosities of the so-called Nihilists. They have their hands and their ears everywhere; they seem to have borrowed our Lord's omnipresence and omnipotence. The late political trials in Moscow, St. Petersburg, and Kiev, have brought incredible, fabulous facts to light. For instance, by what witchcraft do these people print and circulate the revolutionary paper? The little dirty piece of paper, with its crazy appeals and fire-breathing leaders, finds its way everywhere: into the cabinet of the minister and into the room of the official; into the boudoir of the great lady, and into the cellar of the working-man. It pushes its way between two diplomatic despatches; crawls into the pockets of the official uniforms; hides itself in a loaf of dry bread. The head of the third department, the all-powerful chief of police, brings it home with him one evening: "The rascals, if they would only use better paper!" he cries out in his own saloon before several members of his own family. The next morning he opens the official paper—what does he see carefully folded up in it, printed on glossy silk? The last number of the revolutionary journal!

We see that under some circumstances Nihilism can be terribly intelligent, can possess savage wit; and that also proves its immeasurable strength. The people itself, the Muschik, knows and understands nothing of the chaos of the new doctrine; but the intelligence of the country, the studying young men, with their education, their enthusiasm, their fire and humor, live and fight for it. In every university Nihilism has an invisible professor's chair. How learnedly and cleverly the young heroes talk in Turgenev's "Fathers and Sons"! They read Büchener's "Kraft und Stoff," abuse Hegel, worship Schopenhauer, and will not give a penny for Raphael and his divine art. "At bottom," says Mérimée, in his preface to his celebrated novel, the first natural history of the Nihilist, "I do not consider these people particularly dangerous; these sons are not worse than their fathers; and then, as a rule, they are lazy, and the people, the sole authors of lasting revolutions, do not understand their theories at all, and the young gentlemen have never taken pains to make them clear." Prince Meschtschersky judges them still more wildly in his book, which appeared in 1859: Nihilism seems to him nothing more than a high degree of nervousness; the students are victims of anemia, their blood contains no iron, they take too little exercise. They ought to take plenty of exercise, and Nihilism would disappear of itself. These silly commentaries are disposed of by the events which grow more horrible from month to month in Russia. Everywhere the youth works and delves as an elementary power, which must be taken into consideration; and Nihilism is strong because it was born in the midst of the Russian youth, is almost synonymous with it, with the male as well as the female. The prosecutions of the last few years have shown what part young women take in this terrible work. Everywhere you meet the female student, that mysterious being with short hair and almost masculine garments. She generally belongs to a respected, very often to a rich family; she possesses intellect and a devilish strength of will; she is beautiful. And beauty, wealth, courage, and intellect,—they are all necessary for the midnight work. She has no will of her own; no longer any feelings; she is an instrument in the service of the secret society; she is like a dead body—perinde ac cadaver—is taught the Jesuits also—like a corpse that moves, murders, poisons, loves, hates at command. Never before has woman been made the slave of a political idea in such a manner. Nihilism has its own matrimonial system. Two people pair themselves in its service; but their marriage is only a semblance; man and wife are statues to one another; the morning after the wedding finds a virgin—Solowiew, the last would-be assassin of the Czar, had contracted such an alliance; and suddenly the married virgin receives the order to win over this or that person to the society, and all shame is as if blown away, and the pure maiden gives up her charms to any one who in return will sell her his political conscience. Was that not terrible what the prosecution in Kiew brought to light! A beautiful girl of a high family had sold her soul to these powers of the dark. The wretched child went from city to city, hither and thither, wherever she was called, and enrolled new recruits for Nihilism with her beauty. Many lovers were at her feet; but she listened to no one who had not been previously designated as useful by the society. In order to render the flight of the prisoners in Kiew possible, in obedience to superior orders, she made her way into the guard-room among a brutal, drunken soldiery, whom she maddened with her charms. Her friends escaped—and she was taken half-dead to prison.

Such examples prove only too plainly that these people are capable of everything, and that in these northern natures there is a latent energy which cannot be mastered by severity and cruelty. Even the Muschik and the common people are being more diligently taken in hand by them than ever before. Students leave the lecture rooms to mix with the peasants; princes leave their palaces to seek work in the factories; noble girls flee from their families to go into service as cooks and seamstresses. And, if they are disturbed in the midst of their propaganda by the police, they wander with unbroken courage to Siberia, march defiantly to the gallows, always setting the dangerous, contagious example of triumphant martyrdom. Of what use, then, are blows, chains, the scaffold?

What does Nihilism purpose? It hardly knows itself. Bazarow, in "Father and Sons," simply wishes to destroy, et puis nous verrons; and Markelow also wishes to destroy in "New Land," car après, il faudra refaire tout cela; and lately a Nihilist sums up his teachings as follows: "Take heaven and earth, State and Church, kings and God, and spit on them,—that is what we want." Formerly, such insane theories seemed empty words, and vainglorious boastings. They threaten to become true, however, if Russia does not hasten to set a nobler goal before the powerful but misdirected energy of its people,—that is, to give each one that measure of political liberty, without which the man of the nineteenth century cannot live.—F. P. W., in Advertiser.

LEIPZIG.

LA CAPITALE in a late issue published a letter from General Garibaldi to his constituents in Rome, in which he admitted that the House of Savoy had powerfully aided in the regeneration of Italy, but accused it of having afterwards ruined the country and brought it into a condition of misery. The general recommended that the army should be dissolved, and declared that "nothing must be given to the priests." In conclusion, Garibaldi urged the people of Rome to hiss all the prominent men of the Right as they left the Chamber of Deputies. The paper containing the letter was seized by the police.

[CONTINUED FROM PAGE 293.]

of officers, Zimri S. Wallingford, Lucias Everett, and Josiah B. Folsom were chosen wardens, and Thaddeus P. Cressey, clerk, for the ensuing year. The oath of office was then duly administered to the wardens and clerk.

"On motion of Dr. York, Jasper H. York, Russell B. Wiggin, John Bell, Mrs. Z. S. Wallingford, and Mrs. J. B. Folsom were chosen a committee to draft by-laws, and report at the next adjourned meeting. The meeting was then adjourned to Tuesday evening, June 16, at 8 o'clock.

(Signed) "T. P. CRESSEY, Clerk."

(See deposition of Cressey.)

"After these proceedings," says Mr. Abbot, "I think we all believed that we had complied with all the conditions of forming a legal organization. Notice of the election of these officers was published in the Dover Gazette, and I, at least, thought we had done everything required by straightforward dealing in the matter of organization. Of your intention to organize legally and completely, I think there could be no doubt at that time.

"In June, however, a complaint was made to the Supreme Court by the conservative members of the Unitarian society, asking that an injunction should be issued restraining us from occupying the Unitarian church. . . . Your counsel in the case denies the existence of any Independent Society, declares that you occupy the church as Unitarians and nothing else, and hence makes it appear that, contrary to all my public statements, I am still the preacher of a Unitarian society. Such is his argument, as contained in his printed brief, and published to the community. He holds the opinion that your success in the pending law-suit depends on the validity of this argument, and that you cannot occupy the church except as a Unitarian society, or the majority of it. By this argument, therefore, he has placed you in a very awkward predicament. If you go on and complete immediately your legal organization (some trifling details of which, as it turns out, are still wanting), he says you will lose the church; but if you wait and win the case by means of his argument, I believe you will lose what is worth infinitely more than the church, namely, the principle for which we contend.

"We have taken the ground, publicly and privately, that we are an independent society: can we afford to win our suit on the ground that we are not? The case will not be decided till late in December. You have ample time to set this matter right. In my opinion, honor and integrity are at stake. Only one course seems to me just and right,—to organize at once, in accordance with the letter of the law, and then run the risk of losing the church. To postpone all action on the matter, and to hold the church until after December as a majority of the Unitarian society, notwithstanding our public profession of being an independent society this is a course I cannot adopt myself, or be a party to, either directly or indirectly. I remained with you solely on condition of your forming an independent society, having a perfect right to say on what terms I could or could not conscientiously remain. I understood you to agree to comply with this condition. You and I both thought that it had been fully complied with. . . . I told you at the start I could not preach to a Unitarian society. You respected my scruples, . . . and consented to form an independent society."

Jasper H. York, in his deposition, states that he is one of the wardens of The First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover, for 1868; that it was several weeks after Abbot's pastoral relations to the society ceased, on the 1st of April, before he preached again in the meeting-house; that it was not till after his meeting in American Hall; says that he (York) never gave permission to said Abbot to return to said church to preach, but that he did give such permission to the executive committee of the independent society. He is asked: "Who are the executive committee of said independent society. When and where were they chosen?" He answers: "Z. S. Wallingford is one, and I think J. B. Folsom and Lucias Everett are the other two. I don't recollect when they were chosen: they were chosen between the two adjourned meetings of the Unitarian society, or immediately after the last adjourned meeting. They were chosen before Mr. Abbot began to preach in the house, in May, at the house of Mr. Wallingford." Again he says: "I never was chosen one of the executive committee of the independent society. I think I was appointed one of a committee of three to nominate an executive committee."

Immediately after Mr. Abbot had preached his farewell to the independent society, the plaintiffs proceeded at once and took the deposition of Cressey, in order to find, if possible, the records of this society, which until then nobody had been able to find. In his deposition, taken October 15th, he discloses the facts stated by Mr. Abbot. He finds and produces the records of the society, and annexes them to his deposition, confirming Mr. Abbot in every particular. On cross-examination, he is asked by Mr. Wheeler, his counsel, as follows: "About the time of commencing taking testimony in this case in June last, did not the defendants' counsel call upon you for information respecting the formation of an independent society, and for any records thereof? If so, what was the result?" Ans. "He did. I told him there had been none formed, . . . and I did not think enough of these minutes to mention them to him."

Mr. Cressey also says that Mr. Abbot, in September, 1868, "sent in his resignation, and that some of his friends met at Mr. Wallingford's, and as signers of a subscription paper, to raise money to pay him for preaching, accepted his resignation."

It thus appears that this subscription paper, designed to constitute an independent society, was got up and signed between the two adjourned meetings of the Unitarian society, holden the 13th and 27th of April, that the independent society itself was organized about the same time, or immediately after the second adjourned meeting, April 27, and that these men—Wallingford, Everett, and Folsom—the men with whom, Mr. Abbot says, in his answer, he made the contract to preach that year—were at this time acting as executive committee temporarily of said independent society, which had had probably several meetings before that of June 9, which appears from the records to have been an adjourned meeting, at which Dr. York, as a member of a committee chosen at a former meeting, upon the subject of permanent organization, then made a report, recommending a set of permanent officers of the society, who were then chosen "for the ensuing year," and who took the oath of office as wardens and clerk. After April 1, 1868, Mr. Abbot was employed by an independent society as its teacher and preacher. His subscription was raised by the members of such independent society, as such, distinctively and specially. He was employed to preach to such independent society, and did preach to it, and when he closed he tendered his resignation to the same independent society, which met and accepted it, and discharged him, and closed up the contract, though for certain reasons of policy it was then thought best to ignore the name of the Independent Society. The Unitarian society had nothing to do with electing or contracting with, or employing or paying or consulting with, or dismissing Mr. Abbot; in fact, that society had nothing to do with him, except that he was allowed by the wardens of said Unitarian society to occupy their house and preach his anti-Christian doctrines there, as the plaintiffs claim, in well-known disregard and violation of their duty as such wardens.

What the defect in their organization was that prevented this independent society from becoming a legal society for all purposes, we are not informed. Whether in fact there was any such defect is not made certain, and we are led to doubt it. But, if there was, it does not alter the case at all. That there was for a time such a society in fact, of which these defendants were acting members, many or all of them, there is no doubt; and that its purposes and objects were directly hostile to the purposes and objects of the Unitarian society is equally apparent, and must have been equally well known to its members; and, so far as it affects the good faith of its members, it is entirely immaterial whether the independent society became fully organized as a legal society or not. If there was any defect in completing its organization, it was, no doubt, as Mr. Abbot says, owing to the notice which was served upon defendants of the commencement of legal proceedings; for we find that the next day after the independent society had chosen its officers "for the ensuing year," the plaintiffs served a notice (June 10) upon them, describing them as being in fact members of the independent society, citing them to appear before the Supreme Court at its law term, to be held June 16, at Exeter, when all at once, "in the twinkling of an eye," this independent society, which had been in existence as it would seem for about two months, raising large sums of money by subscription among its members for the promotion of its objects, which had contracted for a preacher for the year, had organized as a corporate body, assumed a corporate name, had elected its permanent annual officers, and kept and preserved a record of its doings, and had published a notice of its proceedings and doings in the public newspapers, is ignored and abandoned, and its very existence is denied by the defendants, except Mr. Abbot, who alone, of all this independent society, as it would seem, is willing to admit the whole truth and abide the consequence. For a time the defendants seemed disposed to deceive Mr. Abbot by pretending to be independents, when their secret design was to continue with the Unitarians, and not form any independent society in fact; and this seems to have been their view up to the time of the third parish meeting of the Unitarian society, April 27, the next day after the first meeting of the independent society in American Hall. But some six weeks after this, as Mr. Abbot says, or early in June, he became convinced "that the independent society must either complete its legal organization, or else come under the suspicion of being a nonentity, a mere blind for deceiving the public in regard to the real nature of our movement." Perhaps he became convinced that such had been the real purpose and object of the defendants (except himself) thus to deceive the public; but such was not his purpose, nor could he be long deceived or blinded in regard to their true objects. He, therefore, early in June, insists that the proper steps be taken to organize the independent society. They comply with his wishes, and vote to complete their organization as an independent society, and go on, and, in fact, organize, adopt a name, choose their permanent officers for the year, choose a committee to draft by-laws to be submitted at an adjourned meeting which was appointed for June 16, and adjourned, all believing that their organization was complete and legal, and all intending that it should be so.

The defendants intended at that time to form the independent organization, and intended to leave and abandon the Unitarian society; and when they completed, as they supposed, the organization of the independent society, they left, withdrew from, abandoned, and seceded from the old Unitarian society of Christians forever. Though they had been long hesitating, and though they might never have come to that point, except for the influence which Mr. Abbot exerted over them, yet they did finally come to the point of abandoning the old society and forming a new one, whose creed or sentiments, so far as it had any, were antagonistic to those of the old society. At that time (June 9), at the close of their meeting of that day, most of these defendants had not the most remote idea of ever going near the old Unitarian society of Christians again. They had seceded from that society, and formed a new and entirely different society, in which their future home was to be,—a society so hostile, in all its views and doctrines and aims and purposes, to the old society, that no man could consistently belong to both at the same time. This was thoroughly understood by Mr. Abbot, and was thoroughly explained by him to these defendants; and they were made to understand it as he did, so that they all intended, when the independent society was fully formed and organized, as they all supposed, and they had become active members of the same, to abandon and secede from, and did, in fact, abandon and secede from, the Unitarian society of Christians forever. This we find to be the fact upon all the testimony in the case. Had it not been for the facts disclosed in Mr. Abbot's farewell discourse to this independent society, we might never have found the evidence of its organization by these defendants. If Mr. Cressey's statement in his deposition can be credited, he had concealed, even from his own counsel, all knowledge of the existence of such society and of its records. Whatever we may think in relation to the truth of that statement, it is certain that, from the moment there was any notice of the commencement of legal proceedings, these facts were attempted to be concealed from everybody else, and especially from these plaintiffs and their counsel. Whoever drew Mr. Abbot's answer for him evidently had the same object in view, as will be seen by an examination of its terms; but, when Mr. Abbot is finally forced in self-defence to disclose all these facts in October, then the plaintiffs find who was the sworn clerk of this independent society, and where its records are, and what they are, and show up the whole thing.

The only evidence which the defendants introduce to meet or answer this is that an interview took place one Sunday between Mr. Wheeler, the defendants' counsel, and Samuel Hale, one of the plaintiffs, in presence of York, at Wheeler's house, about the 11th of October, 1868, after the suit was commenced, and after Mr. Abbot's farewell address to the independent society had been delivered and published, where York says that Wheeler made to Hale this proposition,—“To enter the action ‘Neither party,’ the effect of which is, the suit stops, and each party pays its own cost; each person, who will, subscribes what he pleases for preaching; the wardens to apply to the association for preachers, and the deak to be supplied in that way.” York says that Wheeler stated at the time that he made this proposition on his own responsibility, but he thought the defendants would assent to it. But York says that he (himself) objected to it, and it does not appear that, besides Wheeler and York, this proposition ever came to the knowledge of any of the defendants until York's deposition was taken, or that any of them ever assented to it. York says that Hale never accepted the proposition; but he does not say that he ever refused to accept it, or that the subject was ever again alluded to by anybody.

Now, if Mr. Wheeler had had full authority to make this proposition, it would have been clearly incompetent as evidence upon any ground. 1. Plaintiffs could not have introduced it against the defendant, because it was simply an offer to compromise an existing suit, which is never admissible. 2. The defendants could put in their own sayings, their own statements, in their own favor, to make out their own case. This is too well settled and too plain for argument. 3. But Wheeler had no authority to make the proposition, and he so explains it at the time, so that nobody would be bound by it, if it were accepted; and there is no evidence that the defendants ever ratified or assented to the proposition. 4. And, even if made by authority of the defendants, and if it were competent, it bound the defendants to do nothing. The effect of it would simply be to release the defendants from the pending law-suit, without any consideration, either present, past, or future. Defendants did not agree to subscribe a dollar. The contemplated subscription was to be entirely voluntary, and the defendants would not one of them, probably, have troubled themselves about the old Unitarian society, after they were well out of the law-suit; but they could go along with their independent society then without fear and without hindrance. They might well consent that the pulpit of the plaintiffs' meeting-house should be supplied by the Unitarian society, when they themselves were not to be responsible for any of the pay for the preaching. We think the defendants might as well have omitted this last effort on their part towards making out their defence. We fail to see any evidence here that the defendants had not, most of them, joined the independent society, and had not seceded from and abandoned the old society.

Mr. Abbot says, “We have taken the ground, publicly and privately, that we are an independent society,” and of course, as he would have us infer, not the Unitarian society, or any portion of it; and such was the fact. These defendants, in the early part of June, 1868, were claiming to be an independent society, both publicly and privately, and were claiming to act as such in hiring Mr. Abbot, and were not claiming to act as any part or portion of the Unitarian society. They saw the inconsistency and impropriety of attempting or claiming to act in both these capacities at the same time. Mr. Abbot refused to be the preacher to the Unitarian society, or to any part or faction of said society, and the defendants had finally come, though late, to adopt his views, and had now formed the independent society in order to be able to retain his services, which they could not do as any part or portion of the Unitarian Society of Christians.

“We have taken the ground, publicly and privately, that we are an independent society,” and not any part or portion of the old Unitarian Society of Christians, says Mr. Abbot, in substance; and no one denied the charge at the time, or does deny it in the evidence, though all the defendants (except Abbot) stoutly deny it in their answer; but the evidence establishes the fact beyond all question, notwithstanding the denial of the answer. The necessity of forming the independent society was to accomplish an object which could not be accomplished by the defendants as a part or portion of the Unitarian society. Mr. Abbot was not employed by the old society of Unitarian Christians, or by anybody in their behalf, nor by any part or faction of said old society as such, for the simple reason that he would not be employed by them, and would not preach to them, or any part of them, as Unitarians or as Christians, or as members of a society that was called by that name. These defendants must not only form an independent society, but they must cease to be members of the Unitarian society of Christians in Dover, in order that they might be able to treat with Mr. Abbot, and secure his permanent services as their religious teacher and preacher.

To be sure, our acts of 1819 and of 1827 provided a way by which any member of a religious society might withdraw and cease to be a member of the same, simply by leaving a notice in writing to that effect with the clerk of such society. 2 N. H. Laws (1824), 45; N. H. Laws (1830), 463. This furnished an easy method by which any member might withdraw from any religious society at pleasure, and terminate all liability as such member; but it does not follow by any means that this was the only way that a person could cease to be a member of a religious society. He might cease to be a member without giving the notice in writing, as was expressly held in Baptist Church v. Rouse, 21 Conn. 164, where it was held that, though no such notice was given, yet that all the circumstances of the case might properly be submitted to the jury, to find, as a question of fact, whether there had been a secession from the old society or not; and, in settling that fact, not only all the acts of the parties, but more particularly their intentions, were material. The acts and motives, which were held to be material, were evidences of intention; and the fact of secession is to be found or not upon all the evidence in the case, including acts with the motives that influenced them, and the circumstances under which they were performed, and more particularly the intentions with which they were done. The real intentions of the parties at the time would be of great and generally of controlling weight in the settlement of such questions of fact. Wiswell v. First Congregational Church, 14 Ohio St. 32; Dublin case, 38 N. H. 459.

Having found as matter of fact in this case that these defendants had, on or before the 9th of June, 1868, not only as they supposed formed a new and an independent society “for the promotion of free religious principles,” but had abandoned and intentionally seceded from The First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover, it follows that they forfeited all right to that society's property or any part thereof, or to the use of any property which belonged, or the use of which belonged, to the old society, and hence have no further claim to the use of the meeting-house in question for any purpose whatever. Hence it follows that the injunction asked for in this case should be granted, as well upon the facts of the case as upon the law.

We find that any claim that was made, if any was made, after the meeting of April 27, 1868, by most of these defendants to be members of the old society, and especially after they had fully determined to form and organize their new independent society, was simply a pretence, and without any foundation in fact; but as soon as the legal proceedings are commenced, and it is found that their success in the law-suit may depend upon the fact as to whether they are members of the one society or the other, and when it is supposed that in order to succeed in this suit the existence of the independent society must be denied, and that they must still claim to be members of the Unitarian Society of Christians, we find the defendants ready to take both positions, that they are still members of the Unitarian Society of Christians, and that they are not and have never been members of any independent society, and are willing to deny the existence of any independent society altogether. Their claims to be still members of the Unitarian Society of Christians have just the same foundation that their denial of the existence of the independent society rests upon, which is simple assertion, unsupported by facts. The facts are all found to be the other way.

When Mr. Abbot saw how ready most of these defendants (except himself) were to abandon the independent society, and even to deny its very existence, after all that had been done by said society, and how ready they were to assume any new position that might seem necessary; when he saw how ready they were even to desert and betray him, and to compromise their own consistency and integrity, for the sake of success in a paltry suit at law, it is not strange that he left them when his year, for which he had engaged, was but half-completed. His last prayer in Dover was, most probably, that he might be saved from his friends.

He seems to have understood their true position, when he suggested that, after having taken the ground, publicly and privately, as they had done, that they were an independent society, and were acting as such, they could not afford to win their suit on the ground that they were not, and when he boldly suggested to them that their honor and integrity were at stake, and could only be preserved by moving forward as an independent society, and abandoning the false position (in which they seemed willing to put themselves, in the hope of a temporary advantage in their suit) of claiming to be members of the old society, which they had abandoned and seceded from. Fortunate would it have been for these defendants, had they listened to this last admonition of their religious teacher, and followed his friendly advice and timely counsel in this matter of worldly concern, as they had long been doing in all matters that related to their religious and spiritual interests; for, although by that course they might not have won their cause in the suit, yet they would have gained what would have been infinitely better.

JESTINGS.

EGYPT is the place for juvenile excursions. A boy can always find his “mummy” there.

AUTHORS are spoken of as dwelling in attics, because so few of them are able to live on their first story.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

“MY SON,” SAID a stern father, “do you know the reason why I am going to whip you?” “Yes,” replied the hopeful: “I suppose it's because you're bigger than I am.”

IT IS SAID that a vessel left Boston the other day, carrying eight hundred thousand gallons of rum and one missionary. And yet people complain that the life of a missionary is a hard one.

PRACTICAL.—Young lady visitor (reading the parable of the Prodigal Son): “And he would fain have eaten of the husks that the swine did eat.” Small boy (to teacher): “Why did he not kill one of the pigs?” (Young lady visitor much shaken.)

“DID YOU EVER,” asked a brother humorist of Josh Billings, “stand at the hall door after your lecture and listen to what the people said about it as they passed out?” Replied Josh: “I did—once” (a pause and a sigh); “but I'll never do it again!”

“MA,” SAID AN inquisitive little girl, “will rich and poor folks live together when they go to heaven?” “Yes, my dear, they will be all alike there.” “Then, ma, why don't rich and poor Christians associate together here?” The mother did not answer.

A COMPANY of Vassar girls were found by a professor fencing with broomsticks in the gymnasium. He reminded them that such an accomplishment would not aid them in securing husbands. “It will help us to keep them in order,” replied one of the girls.

ARITHMETICAL TOAST.—The fair daughters of this land,—May they add virtue to beauty, subtract envy from friendship, multiply amiable accomplishments by sweetness of temper, divide time by sociability and economy, and reduce scandal to its lowest denomination.—Ec.

THAT WAS A THOROUGHLY characteristic and sincere reply which a surprised saloon-keeper is reported as making the other day to a religious worker, who visited him in his place of business and asked him whether he expected to go to heaven. “To be sure,” he replied, “zum time, bime-by. Vy vudn't I?”

THE NEW YORK Express wonders if it is grammatical to say, “Are you going to the theatre to-night?” It may be grammatical, but it isn't refined. “Is it your intention to be present within the gilded halls where comedy and tragedy hold sway when then the sun shall have gone down the west and night's sable mantle enfolds the weary world?” would have a more cultured sound.—Rockland Courier.

“WHEN I WAS ONCE in danger from a tiger,” said an old East Indian veteran, “I tried sitting down and staring at him, as I had no weapon.” “How did it work?” asked a bystander. “Perfectly: the tiger didn't even offer to touch me.” “Strange! very strange! How did you account for it?” “Well, sometimes I've thought that it was because I sat down on a high branch of a very tall tree.”

AN OLD DARKEY, who was asked if in his experience prayer had ever been answered, replied: “Wel, sah, some pras is ansud' an' some isn't. 'Pends on wat you axes fo'. Just after de wah, wen it was mighty hard scratchin' fo' de cullud breddern, I bsarved dat wenebber I pway de Lord to sen' one o' Marse Peyton's fat turkeys fo' de ole man, 'dere was no notice took o' de partition; but wen I pway da he would sen' de ole man fo' de turkey, de latter was 'tended to befo' sun up nex' mornin', dead sartin'!”

A DOMESTIC TRAGEDY.—On returning from the theatre, the Thompsons find their housemaid in great distress, with her arm bound up in her apron. Mrs. Thompson: “What is the matter, Ann? Have you hurt your hand?” Ann: “W-w-worse than that, ma'am!” Mrs. Thompson: “Not broken your arm, I trust?” Ann: “W-w-worse than that!” Mrs. Thompson: “Good heavens! What is it?” Cook: “The fact is, ma'am, the silly girl has been tryin' on your new bracelet, and none of us knows how to get it off again!”—Punch.

OTERO SIGNS.—In Spain, it would appear they make sure of a death-warrant reaching its victim by getting a receipt for it. We read that Otero, who attempted the life of the King, signed the “notification of his death-warrant.” This is a business-like way of doing things. We suppose it would be accompanied by a note to this effect: “Monday, April 18, 1880. Sir.—Please find enclosed one death-warrant. Acknowledgment will oblige. Yours, etc.,—” To which polite request, Otero probably responded: “Monday, April 18, 1880. Received one death-warrant as per advice. Otero.”

A FIRST CHRISTENING.—The clergyman was a very young man, and had never before held a baby. The infant was a big boy, who began to “corkscrew” his way through clothes and wrappings. The minister held on bravely, but in a few moments the child's face disappeared in the wraps, and his dangling legs were worming their way to the floor. Seized with a horrible impression, he clutched the clothes violently by the sash-band, and, straddling the child upon the chancel-rail, said to the mother, “If you don't ho d that baby, I shall have nothing left but the dress to baptise.” He was at once relieved.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 "13 to 25" "8" "
 "26 to 51" "6" "
 "52" "5" "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 dy, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
 Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of our country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan E. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done"; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Maurice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

Proceedings of Twelfth Annual Meeting, 1879. Contains the essay by John W. Chadwick (with an abstract of the speeches thereon by Messrs. Savage, Tiffany, and Potter) on "Theological and Rational Ethics"; the address by the new President of the Association, Felix Adler, on "The Practical Needs of Free Religion," and briefer addresses on the same topic by F. E. Abbot, F. A. Hinckley, and C. D. B. Mills; together with the Reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer, and other proceedings of the business meeting. Price, thirty cents; packages of five or more, twenty cents each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Sixth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston Mass.

1 8 7 9.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.
 PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.
 EDITOR
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 dy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.
 MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike,
 Mass.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.
 The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.
 Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.
 Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.
 The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. BANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving Principles of the Ox Brain and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Argus.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discusses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK, THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preëxistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchal; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, and James Stephen Selbourne. From the Bar, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half Calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick May Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsey Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
 2. Max Müller.
 3. Emerson.
- For terms, etc., address
CHARLES DEB. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR,

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D. C.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOL. 11.—No. 548.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1880.

{ENTERED AS SECOND} {CLASS MAIL MATTER.}

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

D. M. BENNETT announces his intention to take the lecture field in the autumn. The "subterranean or digger radicals," as Judge Hurlbut cuttingly described them, will all exert themselves to give him a series of public ovations, after the pattern of the late scandalous "Bennett Reception" at New York.

MR. UNDERWOOD has been infamously assailed by Bennett in the Truth Seeker, and the latter complains that he has been officially notified of a suit for slander by the former's attorney. How long will this mad-dog sheet be tolerated by American liberals in its indiscriminate attacks on their best representatives?

THE "REPEAL" movement is alive still, and has the support, not only of the free-love rabble, but also of Democratic papers like the New York Sun, because the "State-Rights Moloch" (as A Fool's Errand most aptly terms it) lies at the bottom of that movement. Repeal of the postal laws against the circulation of obscene literature, as opposed to their reform in the common interest of liberty and morality, is hostile to the whole genius of genuine liberalism; and no graver duty now devolves on the liberal press than that of instructing the people betimes as to the vital nature of this issue.

How do American liberals relish the prospect of being represented at a European Congress of Free-thinkers by Bennett and Rawson? These adventurers have unblushingly nominated themselves as delegates, and are publicly begging for funds to defray their expenses. They are cunning enough to see that their presence as accredited delegates will be everywhere construed as an unqualified indorsement of their dirty characters, notwithstanding the notorious noisomeness of their records, by the general liberal public of America. The evil fruits of the Syracuse betrayal of the National Liberal League are developing themselves with frightful rapidity now, and the better liberals have only themselves to blame for the disgrace entailed on their cause by their own insensibility to the warnings given by THE INDEX emphatically and in ample season.

IN THIS LAST issue of THE INDEX which will appear under our editorial charge, we desire to express our grateful appreciation of the extremely kind words spoken of our retirement by the Daily and Sunday Herald, Christian Register, and Literary World, of Boston,—by the Independent and Christian Union, of New York,—by the Daily Republican, of Springfield, Mass.,—by the New Religion, of Norway, Me.,—by the Journal, of Northampton, Mass.,—by the Religio-Philosophical Journal, of Chicago,—by the Independent, of Vineland, N.J.,—and by the Weekly Times, of Seymour, Ind. These have chanced to fall under our eye, but we also thank all other journals that may have kindly mentioned our retirement without our knowledge. Some of the above are liberal journals, in the genuine sense of that word; some of them are Christian journals, and it reflects honor on the various types of Christianity they represent that they should candidly concede honorable motives to one who, as they well know, is no less anti-Christian to-day than heretofore, and must remain so to the end.

THE FREE-LOVE RING are actively scheming to send some of their own number as "representatives" of American liberalism to a proposed "International Congress of Free-thinkers," to be held at Brussels, next August. D. M. Bennett and A. L. Rawson, of well-known antecedents, volunteer to go in that capacity!!! All they want is money, for which they appeal to the liberal public. The President of the National Liberal League opposes the whole project of sending delegates; but the Truth Seeker promptly snubs him for casting a "wet blanket" on its comfortable little scheme. Is that phrase (the very same with which the Truth Seeker began its attack on THE INDEX two years and a half ago) the beginning of a similar attack on Mr. Wright? He will find it so, unless he obediently submits to the "power behind the throne," and ceases all opposition to the free-love ring that elected him. But it is time for American liberals to ask themselves very seriously whether it is for the permanent advantage of their cause to endure any longer the Bennetts and the Rawsons as their unchallenged public representatives.

THE Christian Statesman, of Philadelphia, says in its issue of June 10: "The motto on the original seal of Harvard was 'Pro Christo et Ecclesiae.' The inscription has been changed." This is a surprising error, patent on the surface. Do not the estimable editors know that the Latin preposition pro is never followed by the dative case? Harvard College may have a lax theology, as the Statesman believes; but surely its Latinity is above impeachment. The truth is that the original seal bore the simple inscription Veritas, and that its present inscription is Christo et Ecclesiae. If the moral character of the College has degenerated since the change, as the Statesman declares it has, that is a comical comment on the value of the "Christian Amendment" of the Constitution; for if the Christian Amendment of the college seal has made Harvard University immoral, what effect on the morals of the country will the Christian Amendment of the Constitution probably have? Perhaps the Statesman will have answered this conundrum by the time we resume the editorship of THE INDEX. We do not believe it will answer it before!

ACKNOWLEDGMENT has been made above for the generous farewells, to which we gratefully respond, extended to us by many of our exchanges as we leave the field of journalism. But the debt of gratitude is not yet wholly paid. Although we may not quote here the praises of those we respect, we are too proud of having earned such tributes as the following not to share them with our readers. One of the most blatant free-lovers and repealers writes of us thus to the Truth Seeker of June 5: "Never let his name be again spoken, save with the deepest contempt and loathing. Lower than he has descended no man can go. He has touched the almost fathomless depths of infamy; and hereafter mark as a traitor to Free-thought and Liberalism, as the sworn enemy of justice and truth, as a panderer to falsehood and cowardly defamation, as the would-be assassin of innocence and virtue, as the poltroon smiter of gray-haired women and tender girls, any man who lifts his voice or wields his pen in his defence. He has made himself an outlaw. Let the fate of outlaws be his," etc. The moulder of these fustian anathemas is silly enough, but not dangerous; and he has our eternal gratitude for cursing rather than praising us. What is the real cause of all this frothing at the mouth? Writing in the world except our reference to the author in THE INDEX of May 20, as one who, in spite of the repeated exposures of Bennett's immoral character, persists in holding him up before the public as a "martyr-hero," "his name rendered forever illustrious and his character unstained"! Similar abuse awaits every liberal who dares to protest against the suicidal folly of permitting such characters to pass unchallenged as the confessed martyrs, heroes, and saints of liberalism. Fortunate has it been for the liberal cause that at least a few have uttered the protest in season, redeemed that cause from utter ignominy, and taken the abuse with proud and stern disdain. Grateful as we are to the general press for its sympathy and approval in our battle for public morality, we are more grateful still for the hatred, calumny, and curses of the false liberals whose praise is poison, whose friendship is shame, and whose alliance is death to the cause that tolerates it. May the battle never cease till the victory is won for TRUTH, RIGHTEOUSNESS, and LOVE!

AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N.Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Ed. of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....New York.
 W. J. B. HARGRAVE, Ed. "Freethought Journal," Toronto, Can.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N.Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.....Tenaft, N.J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N.Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N.Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABBENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....D. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COIT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL UNIONS,

Chartered by the American Liberal Union.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 SYRACUSE, N.Y.—[Officers not reported.]
 ALBANY, N.Y.—President, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut; Acting President, Adam Strever; Secretary, B. C. Andrews.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 PASSAIC CITY, N.J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 ROCHESTER, N.Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Cale.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N.Y. MOSES HAYS, Rochester, N.Y.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cort-S. R. URBINO, West Newton, land, N.Y.
 Z. T. WATKEYS, Syracuse, N.Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N.Y.
 NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syra-FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, cuse, N.Y.
 GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Mil-MOSES W. DODGE, Albany, N.Y. waukee, Ill. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N.Y.
 HARRIET A. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y. SARAH B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
 W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. HOPE WHIPPLE, Boston, Mass.
 T. O. GAGE, Fayetteville, N.Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
 B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thordike, CHAULES ELLIS, Boston, Mass.
 CATHERINE C. HURLBUT, Al-cuse, N.Y.
 EBBEN TURE, Chelsea, Mass. H. P. STARK, Rochester, N.Y.
 JOHN NILL, Watertown, N.Y. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N.Y.
 E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. M. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N.Y.
 THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N.Y. JOHN PREST, Albany, N.Y.
 JAMES B. PIKE, Rochester, N.Y. C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mass. D. B. MOREY, Malden, Mass.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Dec. 12, 1879.

Voted, That, in the judgment of this Board, the name "National Liberal League" has become so widely and injuriously associated in the public mind with attempts to repeal the postal law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature by mail,—with the active propagandism of demoralizing and licentious social theories,—and with the support of officials and other public representatives who are on good grounds believed to have been guilty of gross immoralities,—that it has been thereby unfitted for use by any organization which desires the support of the friends of "natural morality."

Voted, That for this reason the Directors of the National Liberal League of America recommend that the name of this organization be changed to "AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION," and they respectfully submit this recommendation to their constituent Auxiliary Liberal Leagues for consideration and action.

Voted, That, since it is inexpedient to call an Annual Congress of this League at the present time, this Board will deem itself authorized to make the proposed change of name on receiving approving votes to this effect from a majority of the Auxiliary Leagues.

Voted, That the Secretary be instructed to send a certified copy of these votes to the President and Secretary of each Auxiliary League, with a request for immediate action thereupon; and to report to this Board at his earliest convenience.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Directors of the National Liberal League of America, Feb. 6, 1880.

Whereas, A certified copy of the resolutions adopted by this Board on December 12, 1879, was duly sent by the Secretary to the President and Secretary of each constituent Auxiliary League; and

Whereas, The reasons therein given for recommending a change of name by this organization have been heartily and unanimously approved by all the constituent Leagues heard from at this date; and a majority of all the Leagues on our list of auxiliaries has approved the name of "American Liberal Union," while one of them has expressed a preference for the name of "National Secular Union," therefore,

Voted, That the name of the National Liberal League of America be, and hereby is, changed to AMERICAN LIBERAL UNION.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"Philosophy the Guide of Life."

A LECTURE DELIVERED BEFORE THE HARVARD PHILOSOPHICAL CLUB, AT BOYLSTON HALL, CAMBRIDGE, MASS., MARCH 1, 1880.

BY FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

The most distinguished and venerable literary society, among American college-men, is undoubtedly the Phi Beta Kappa, of which the Harvard Chapter was organized September 5, 1781. It has long since ceased to be a secret (if it ever was one) that these mystic letters are the initials of the society's Greek motto—"Φιλοσοφία Βίον Κυβερνήτης"—"Philosophy the Guide of Life." Aside from the social, literary, and gastronomic enjoyments of its anniversary gatherings, which are certainly cheap at three dollars a head, the chief practical benefit I have derived from membership in this time-honored sodality is the suggestion of a subject and title for to-night's lecture. You will therefore acquit me of all innovation, all departure from the great traditions of Harvard, all suspicion of disloyalty to the Alma Mater whom her sons deservedly cherish with so much pride and love, when I plead the august sanction of the Phi Beta Kappa Society for the thesis I am now to defend: namely, that PHILOSOPHY, for all who can rise to the heights of her grand instructions, is the truest and best GUIDE OF LIFE. That the enthusiastic young men who, in the excitement and turmoil of our great Revolutionary struggle, founded the Society largely for patriotic purposes and gave it its name, fully and consciously intended all that I find in that name, it would not be fair to postulate; probably, in the good old phrase, they "built better than they knew." Be that as it may, the flag they unfurled is eminently fit to float over this ancient university, as type and symbol of the illustrious service it is rendering to the cause of civilization. The name of the Phi Beta Kappa, in fact, is substantially identical with the earliest and original motto of the College seal—"VERITAS,"—a motto whose simplicity and sublimity it was a catastrophe to lose. If Philosophy is indeed the truest and best Guide of Life, it is because Philosophy, worthily conceived, is the pursuit of Truth for Truth's own sake—the "love of wisdom" in all its length and breadth and depth. What other aim could a great university propose to itself, without derogation from its own dignity and melancholy shrinkage of its usefulness to the world?

I take Philosophy to be, essentially, the attempt of the human mind to gather up all the elements of authenticated knowledge, in whatever department of research they have been gained, to fuse them in the furnace of thought, and to reproduce them in a subjective unity that shall faithfully mirror the unity of the objective universe. What the truth of Nature is depends on no caprice or preference of ours; it stands immovable, limitless, eternal, as the great Fact to be studied and obeyed. In humble recognition of this uncreated and indestructible sovereignty of objective truth over all the thoughts and actions, all the passions, sentiments, and aspirations of the human soul, lies the divine right, the divine commission, the divine credential, of Philosophy to be the Guide of Life. Philosophy comes before you as no suitor before his mistress, pleading on bended knee to be graciously accepted and trembling with inward terror lest his suit be denied: it makes no appeal to your choice or your desire; it accepts no crown from your hands. Far from this! In the serene and undervied majesty of truth, it bestows upon you the priceless boon of the knowledge of Nature, and then leaves you to obey or suffer as you will. Do not confound Philosophy with the petty Materialisms, Idealisms, Spiritualisms, Positivisms, Dogmatisms, or any other of the swarming isms that are clamorously thrust upon you as the only genuine article: they are all counterfeits, and worthless. Philosophy is SCIENCE,—not this or that science, nor even a mob of all the sciences confusedly huddled together, but Science made conscious of itself as the unitary, all-comprehensive, and highest possible synthesis of Human Knowledge, with one origin, one method, one spirit, one purpose, one law of life and growth. Science thus conceived includes not only the physical sciences, but also psychology, sociology, ethics, natural theology, or whatever supposed department of knowledge shall succeed in conforming itself to the one scientific method, and thereby establishing its right to be. Science in this large sense and Philosophy are convertible terms, both denoting the organic unity and orderly development of human knowledge as a whole; the one is the "matter," the other is the "form," of knowledge; they both express that permanent ideal of the intellect which aims to equate the truth of thought with the truth of things, but which, like every ideal, always flies in advance of fulfillment, and permits in fact only an endless approximation. Whoever bears this in mind will banish all fear that Philosophy may degenerate into dogmatism; its unity must be, not architectural, but vital and organic. As human knowledge expands in all directions, Philosophy, once become fully conscious of its own method and law, will absorb into itself every increment of fresh discovery as the flourishing tree absorbs into itself the fresh nutriment it receives from the soil. Human knowledge of the universe must always remain incomplete; but Philosophy sums up all of it that is attained at a given period, and in virtue of that fact ordains for man the highest law that he can at that period comprehend. Knowledge or ignorance—on one of these two must all conduct rest. Need it be said that conduct will be wise and good in proportion to the amount of the knowledge and the degree of conformity to it? Men will be wise and good just in proportion as they know and obey the laws of the universe they inhabit. It is nothing against the rightful sway of Philosophy to prove that most men act ignorantly, wilfully, passionately, or selfishly, in contravention of her laws; it would be indeed against her to prove that they escape the penalty. But the penalty is exacted to the uttermost farthing; and "wisdom is justified of her children."

Prof. J. L. Diman, the distinguished Orthodox scholar of Brown University, is reported as saying last Tuesday at the Boston Lowell Institute: "Knowledge is the foundation of all intelligent action and belief, and the question which first presents itself is, 'What can we know?'" I accept Prof. Diman's statement unreservedly, because it is Philosophy alone which can answer that question in all its amplitude. Belief and action ought to be governed by knowledge; can so simple and self-evident a principle be seriously controverted? If it is true, then it follows that Philosophy, or knowledge illumined by consciousness of its own unity as the great interpreter of Nature to Man, can alone organize belief and action into a life fully accordant with the sublime and irrevocable laws of Nature. If, as I trust we all believe, the laws of Nature are the laws of God, how can we doubt that Philosophy is the Guide of Life? Surely we cannot, if the laws of human nature are not violently wrested from their place, as a part of the great system of Nature as a whole. The dualism of Nature and Man is on the surface only, and extends not beyond the exploded metaphysics of ignorant ages; the unity of the universe, including man, is the supreme lesson of modern science. And just as surely as the universe is a unit, so surely must Science, the reflection of its unity in human thought, become Philosophy, the Guide of Life.

What, then, is the creator of Philosophy? Briefly—the human intellect. That, and nothing else.

Feeling, sentiment, emotion, desire, aspiration, love, worship—let us pity the man who has no reverence for these great, primal facts of the human soul. All the beauty, the glory, the sunlight of life would perish out of it, if man were an embodied intelligence only. The heavens may reflect themselves in a glassy lake as faithfully as in human eyes; it is the reaction of the human soul, with its thrill of delight and awe, that makes the difference. There needs no defence of the mighty affections, the lofty aspirations, the tender and beautiful and sublime sentiments, that crown our humanity as with an aureole: the thinker that could disown it has never yet been born. But when the attempt is made to metamorphose purely subjective feeling into an instrument for the discovery of objective truth,—when it is sought to build philosophic belief on a merely emotional basis,—when the natural distinctions of things are thus subverted and the heart is set to do the work of the head,—then there is great danger that the intellect may resent this violation of its own indefeasible rights, and trample even the just claims of the heart under foot. This is no imaginary peril. More than anything else, illegitimate appeals to emotion and illegitimate claims in its behalf are responsible for the hard, cold, one-sided, combative and negative intellectualism which characterizes so much of contemporary speculation. The intellect will not submit, to-day less than ever, to be shorn of its imperial prerogative as the supreme judge of what is true and what is false. The freedom of philosophy must not be—permanently it cannot be—defeated or curtailed by any dictation of the heart, when truth or falsehood is the issue. Nothing but disaster to the beliefs thus unwisely defended can possibly ensue. So far as belief is an intellectual act (and it is mainly that), it must have an intellectual, not emotional, basis; it must rest on evidence, and not on desire. The intellect cannot deny its own perceptions of truth; it must see what it does see; it must have freedom to build perception on perception, fact on fact, experience on experience, till the foundations of belief are solidly established on reality, not on dreams. If this, the only true freedom of philosophizing, is forbidden to the intellect, it wreaks a terrible revenge by eating out the very heart of belief itself, infecting with doubt the entire atmosphere of thought, and undermining by its enforced scepticism the truest and sublimest convictions of the soul. That is the terrible penalty of compelling the intellect to violate its own essential nature, and accept the emotional prejudgments of the heart in place of the verified conclusions of the head. "He who is to follow philosophy must be a freeman in mind," said Claudius Ptolemy in the Almagest: "δεῖ δ' ἐλευθέρων εἶναι τῇ γνώμῃ τὸν μέλλοντα φιλοσοφεῖν." But the freedom of philosophy is freedom to follow the guidance of the intellect, with uttermost fidelity, in the search for truth.

There is, in fact, no alternative to this open and honorable freedom of the intellect except its surreptitious and unconfessed employment. It is defective analysis alone which permits the notion that the heart can really frame an affirmation of anything. What is an affirmation? The conjunction of a subject and a predicate by means of a verb. There can be no affirmation, no sentence or proposition or clause, except by the verb. But the verb is the expression of the essential, fundamental, and characteristic act of the intellect, the exertion of its native vital energy in the conjunction of subject and predicate: whenever that act takes place, it is the intellect—recognized or unrecognized—that performs it. Feeling as such, emotion as such, desire as such, never yet made a predication. Suppose you stand before the stars at night, and in admiration, wonder, and awe, drink into your soul the intoxicating influence of their sublimity; suppose that the floods of high and holy feeling surge upwards in your bosom, till the involuntary exclamation bursts from your lips: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork!" What would this mean? That this great confession of God was the affirmation of your heart, and that your head had nothing to do with it? Perhaps most persons would at once say so. Yet the truth is that your intellect, roused by the kindling activity of emotion, made the swift inference from effect to cause, and linked predicate to subject—which the intellect alone can do. Feeling did but furnish the impulse; it was intellect that made the affirmation. Whether in the brief, disconnected, and lofty utterances of the seer, or in the long concatenations of premise and conclusion with which the reasoner unfolds his thought, the essential process is the same: every conjunction of subject and predicate is a vital act of the intellect, and sense and sentiment can but furnish the raw material of its affirmations. Without this raw material of sense and sentiment, intellect, the recognized or unrecognized architect of all beliefs without exception, could build nothing; but, without intellect, sense and sentiment also could build nothing. It is time for Philosophy to correct the defective analysis of the past, to discern its own absolute dependence on the intellect, and to cease the futile effort to build belief on anything except evidence. Let the intellect be disciplined, taught to recognize the whole universe as its proper field of activity, and emancipated from all allegiance save to the fundamental laws of scientific method; above all, let the heart forbear its disastrous interferences with these laws, and be content to follow, not to lead. Taking universal human experience, both sensuous and cognitive, as its solid foundation, and including in this experience the interior facts of sentiment and moral consciousness no less than the exterior facts of the material world, let the intellect alone be recognized as the creator and architect of Philosophy. On no other condition than this can the religious truths most precious to mankind be successfully defended in the ages of scientific light that are to come.

But this is not all. It is essential to recognize Philosophy as the creation of the intellect; and it is equally essential to recognize this creative intellect, not as the individual mind of the isolated thinker, but as the universal mind of the human race. Hitherto the history of Philosophy has been the record of successive systems, each the construction of some single master of thought, and each in turn displacing the systems that had preceded. The consequence has been an excessive subjectivity in philosophical speculation, and an utter lack of the authority of established truth in the results attained. A great change is beginning in this respect. Just in proportion as Philosophy comes to be recognized as neither more nor less than Science, arrived at full consciousness of its own unity of foundation, method and system, in that same proportion will it come to be recognized as possessing a permanent basis of established truth, determined, not by the authority of a single name, however great, but by the universal consensus of the competent. Every particular science has, in its own field, such a body of unquestioned truth, slowly or rapidly increasing from generation to generation; that is what we mean by "the growth of human knowledge." So also Philosophy, as the organic whole of science, must and will acquire a mass of unquestioned truth, too general to be included by any particular science, but accepted as established and authoritative by them all. This tremendous "change of base" is not yet fully effected; but it is unsuspectingly making even now.

For instance, the law of evolution is fast coming to be recognized as in some form an unquestionable truth of universal science, to be challenged only by the ignorant, the whimsical, or the bigoted; the atomic theory and the unity of all cosmical forces are probably destined to be similarly accepted. The significance of these facts cannot be overstated. They mean that the fundamental philosophical standpoint is to be revolutionized—that philosophy is henceforth to be heliocentric, not geocentric,—that the great thinkers of the future will contemplate the universe no longer from the stand-point of the individual ego, but from that of the universal consciousness of the human race as a part of Nature. The old conception of the Ego plus Cosmos, the Ego being posited on the one side and the Cosmos on the other, as if they were in some sort coordinate and equal facts, must drift into desuetude; for it conducts only to a barren and baffling subjectivity, which tends irresistibly toward absolute idealism. If, like Descartes, I begin my thinking by affirming only my own existence, I can never arrive at the Cosmos as a real existence at all; I am logically compelled, with Fichte, to resolve it into a phantasmagoric image proceeding from the Ego itself by a law that works beneath its consciousness. Science is the certain ultimate cure of this diseased subjectivity; it is already compelling Philosophy to a healthy objectivity by the prestige of its own success in dealing with physical facts.

Instead of the old dualism of the Ego plus Cosmos, Philosophy is learning to conceive the Cosmos as the one, integral, all-embracing reality, in which the Ego has its proper place as a part. The almost instinctive and growing dislike of the term Metaphysics, which connotes this ancient dualism, is a straw which betrays the course of the current. But the term Physics will not be its successor or heir. Herbert Spencer's attempt to express all the facts of the universe in mechanical terms is a failure. The unity of the universe means neither the extinction of matter in mind nor the extinction of mind in matter. Modern Science is unquestionably proving, with daily increasing cogency, that Man is a part of Nature; and Materialism has hastened to exult in the proof, as if it were the substantiation of its own one-sided hypothesis. Not at all! The inclusion of Man in Nature is not the exclusion of mind from Man—it is the inclusion of mind in Nature. Granted, unreservedly, that Man is a pure product of Nature, has his place alone in Nature, and can never escape from Nature: what follows?

This—that mind is in Man, the part, and therefore is in Nature, the whole. The real question now becomes, not whether there is any mind in Nature (for that has been unguardedly conceded by Materialism), but whether all the mind which is in Nature is also in Man. That is a question which Materialism has not yet learned even to understand—much less to answer; but it will never be released from the necessity of answering it. Until Materialism can explain how Nature is able to exhibit in its parts what does not exist in itself as a whole, it cannot reasonably deny that there is mind in Nature—which yet it cannot admit, as a general proposition, without exploding its own fundamental thesis. The "change of base" which Philosophy is now effecting, from the stand-point of the individual Ego to the stand-point of the universal human consciousness as a part of Nature, will and must result in giving to spiritual beliefs an immensely stronger intellectual foundation than they ever yet possessed. Alas that mistaken friends of these beliefs should persist in distrusting and denouncing the philosophic and scientific intellect, out of which they originally, though unconsciously, sprang, and by which alone they can be successfully defended!

Three main points, I trust, have been made reasonably clear thus far: (1) that Philosophy, rightly viewed, is Science made fully conscious of its own unity and all-embracing scope; (2) that Philosophy is the product of the intellect, and not of the emotions; and (3) that it is the product of the universal intellect of the human race, positing itself as part of a scientifically known Cosmos, and not of the individual intellect of an isolated Ego, positing itself over against a hypothetical Cosmos that has got to be proved. A fourth point, not less important, is this: that the human intellect is incompetent to set fixed and impassable limits to the field of its own activity in any direction whatever, for the simple reason that the self-same power that sets a limit is equally able to remove it. In other words, the human mind is powerless to determine beforehand, a priori, what it can or cannot learn. That is a question which can be determined by experience alone; and experience has already swept away various neat little fences built by sanguine theorists to keep the mind in pound. Comte, for instance, discouraged the study of stellar chemistry and excluded subjective psychology from his hierarchy of the sciences; but nobody heeds his prohibitions now. Hume found a limit of human knowledge in the nature of the causal nexus; but it has not been respected. Kant established the "thing-in-itself" as an adamant wall about the domain of knowledge; but the separation of noumena and phenomena, on which it rests, is disallowed by more modern thought. Hamilton circumscribed the field of possible knowledge with his "Law of the Conditioned"; Mansel, in his Limits of Human Knowledge, elaborated this into a State Prison for the intellect; Spencer, accepting Hamilton's and Mansel's conclusions, incorporated them into his First Principles in his doctrine of the "Unknowable" as a known limit of knowledge, and Mr. John Fiske adopts it in his Cosmic Philosophy. Still more recently, philosophic self-limitation has named itself Agnosticism, and pronounces the problems of God and Immortality to be fundamentally insoluble. All these attempts of the human mind to hem itself in by an impassable barrier of its own creation are made in forgetfulness of the fact that to unmake is always more easy than to make, and that the intellect, urged irresistibly by its very nature to seek the advancement of knowledge, soon tires of playing prisoner. The universe, being infinite, will always divide itself for man into the known and the unknown, while yet the sphere of the known will be constantly enlarging. But to postulate the "Unknowable" as distinct from the Unknown, and to set it over against the Known as its necessary limit, is to make one's self the victim of a false antithesis. Wise indeed it is to cherish a modest distrust of our own individual abilities; but none the less would I counsel a boundless confidence in the possibilities of the universal human mind.* Take victory for granted until defeat is absolute and irretrievable. All the failures of Philosophy in the past count for nothing to him who comprehends the tremendous revolution now going on in its method and foundation. Its future lies in its own grasp, with vistas of coming conquest over human ignorance that make the heart of the true thinker fairly leap with courage and hope. Problems obstinately locked against the old method of subjectivity, deductivism, and absolute demonstration, will throw wide their doors at the "Open Sesame!" of the scientific method. On the standard at the head of the brave young hosts issuing from the gates of this ancient university, inscribe "THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD" on one side, and on the other "Τὸ πρῶτον βίβη." For by that sign shall they surely conquer!

Such, and such alone, is the Philosophy whose cause I plead to-night, as the Guide of Life. Now let me show what guidance Philosophy so conceived will give.

First of all, Philosophy addresses itself to the individual's intellect; for, as was truly said of old, "As a man thinketh, so he is." The supreme prize it offers to him who enters its service is Unity of Thought built on Knowledge of Nature; and the supreme motive it appeals to is the love of truth for its own sake. There is a lofty morality of the intellect which cannot be set aside; and the study and practice of the scientific method is the best training to develop it. If its chief law were to be thrown into the form of an aphorism, perhaps it would be this: Make your belief as strong as the evidence—and no stronger. The strength of the evidence is not to be determined by the whim or caprice or inclination of any individual, but by the consensus of the competent; and if the individual imagines himself wiser than the consensus of the competent (as not unfrequently he is), he will be able to make this perfectly plain to the competent themselves, and change their consensus. Here is at once the protection of the truth, of the freedom of the individual, and of the authority of the common reason of mankind. Evidence has a common strength to all competent minds, provided individual thought is (as it ought to be) governed by universal logical laws. The universality and obligatoriness of these laws is one of the facts for which individualism in philosophy has a blind eye. Science is educating men to a new sense of moral obligation in the matter of belief; it is teaching them to perceive that whoever, in weighing evidence, throws in his prepossessions or wishes to make the worse appear the better reason, exhibits exactly such honesty as Brennus showed, when, to make the conquered Romans pay him a heavier ransom than he had stipulated, he threw his sword into the scale that balanced the gold. Philosophy guides men to a loftier standard of intellectual ethics. It proclaims the unity of truth, the duty of aiming at unity of belief based on the unity of truth, and the self-degradation of cherishing known contradictions merely because they please. He who would follow Philosophy as his intellectual guide must nerve himself to endure; it will conduct him to no Capuan climate. The heights to which it leads, and from which it promises the grand sweep of an unbroken horizon, offer only the sharp, cold climate of the mountain peak; and the splendor of the outlook must warm the climber's soul till he forgets the tingling of the skin. There are those ready and eager to climb, even on these uncompromising terms.

* As Professor Clifford (Lectures and Essays, 1, 156) tersely puts it: "To every reasonable question there is an intelligible answer, which either we or posterity may know by the exercise of scientific thought."

Next, Philosophy addresses itself to the individual's conscience, still with the same lofty demand for unity—unity of moral purpose in harmony with Nature. Of all lives, a purposeless life is the most contemptible. To float, a bit of driftwood, on the stream of time, without any ambition but to follow the current, is worthy of a chip, but hardly worthy of a human being. Philosophy, demanding moral unity between the individual and the vast system of which he is a part, recognizes the objectivity and supreme sanctity of the moral law, interwoven as it is most profoundly with the innermost constitution of Nature. In virtue of this recognition, Philosophy teaches that every being crowned with the diadem of a moral consciousness should live for a moral purpose, and that this moral purpose should be the voluntary and cheerful identification of self with the highest known interests of the universe. What are these, in man's case, but the highest known interests of humanity? So simple and easy a thing it is to discern our duty to our race! The humblest life that is inspired by this lofty moral purpose, under whatever obscure circumstances and amidst whatever sordid surroundings, acquires the meaning and the majesty of an epic poem. The selfish life is simply a life devoid of moral purpose: that is the essence of its selfishness and its condemnation. There is but one really moral purpose in human life, all minor ones being merely phases of this: namely, to shape our little threescore years and ten according to the ideal set before us in the splendid, divine harmonies of Nature—"each for all, and all for each." It matters little in what special way we are called upon to contribute our tiny quota towards the grand aggregate of the general good; but it matters much that we omit not to contribute this quota, tiny though it be. This is the service and the sacrifice to which Philosophy invites us, if we accept her for our guide. What generous spirit is there that could say her nay?

Lastly, Philosophy makes appeal to the individual's heart—and the same high demand for unity is the burden of the appeal. As she calls upon the intellect to follow truth for truth's own sake,—as she calls upon the conscience to serve humanity for humanity's own sake,—so she calls upon the heart to identify itself also with the same high ends, and to pour out a libation of noble affections before the great altar of the universe. It is not true—I repel the suggestion with energy—that the heart refuses all discipline, and insists on pursuing its wayward way in defiance of Philosophy. What is your fidelity to your friend, what is your constancy to one dearer still, what is your loyalty to your native land, if the ideal of a sacred and passionately cherished duty commands and controls not the great emotional tides of your being, as the moon commands the sea? Leave to the profligates of thought the slimy theory that love is free from obligation, and let us recognize with reverence that love itself is under law. Philosophy calls upon the heart, the sensitive, quivering, throbbing, tender human heart, to twine itself lovingly about truth and duty—about truth as the intellect discerns it, and about duty as the conscience commands it; and her call has never been in vain on men and women of noble soul. Be truth and duty what they may, there is enough of heroism in this humanity of ours to serve them with passionate devotion at any cost of tears,—aye, even to bloody death. How can this universe seem Godless to any one, when through every crack and cranny of human life the divinely intellectual, moral, and affectional nature of man pours its floods of irradiating splendor?

Such a Guide of Life as this is Philosophy, requiring of man in every department of his being a voluntary oneness with the universal whole, and teaching him how to achieve the oneness she requires. She guides him to unity of knowledge through his own intellect, to unity of moral purpose through his own conscience, to unity of love under law through his own heart; and these make a threefold unity in all his life. She offers her guidance to all, but thrusts it upon none. Nay, not to all does she offer it! She offers it not to the Sybarite, not to the coward, not to the fool, not to the time-server or the self-seeker or the fawner for popularity, power, or place. He who elects Philosophy for his Guide must rest contented with the inward consciousness she bestows of oneness with the universe, and find in it an ample compensation for all its costs; and its cost is great. Let him who would follow her measure well his own fortitude and strength; he will need them all. If he looks for sympathy, admiration, applause, let his desires be as moderate as his gratifications will be few. No eye but his own will see the unity of his life, or discern the grand ideal that makes it one; let him bid farewell to vanity, and be happy to dwell with truth. But if his soul is of fibre strong enough and fine enough to dispense with the cheap motives of the crowd, let him be assured that the life which Philosophy guides will be dignified under all circumstances by a spirit that rises above them—will be noble in itself, fruitful of peace within and full of usefulness without. If there is one soul here that shall love Philosophy a little better because I have spoken, surely I can ask no more.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

A WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE OF RELIGIOUS DOUBT.

In recalling my first religious impressions, I cannot attribute much salutary influence to the Orthodox teaching I received. It never met my needs. Being a docile child, I did not openly rebel against the study of the catechism, the learning of hymns, and the attendance at church required of me, but I found all these things very wearisome. Church time always came too soon, though it might find me engaged with Thomson's Seasons, Rasselas, or some equally grave reading. But, in some curious way, I had arrived at an instinctive perception of literary values; and I was already aware of the comparative merits of the Johnsonian style and philosophy and our pastor's mildly tempered exhortations. The manner in which religion was presented to me was doubtless worthy of my respect, but failed to challenge my admiration or awaken my enthusiasm. Eminently dull, decorous, and respectable was the influence of our "sanctuary," where an impressive nature, though safe from the nervous contagion of the camp-meeting, was never developed by any searching of thought or feeling. I passively accepted this negative teaching, so far as to submit to its precepts with my mind, but that they never touched my heart I am quite sure. Perhaps it might have been different with me, if I had heard familiar speech on these subjects, instead of learning about them as a task from books. Religion was a lesson, like any other, according to my habits of thought, and had no closer relation to my daily life than my geography recitation bore to my walks in the woods and pastures. Strange that the spirit of reserve should prevail so far; that people should shrink from speaking, at the fit time, of what is really near and dear to them; and religion is surely the one interest which is of equal weight to every human being.

Yet my childhood could not pass unvisited by some touches of virtuous, if I may not say religious, feeling. Like the small pagan that I was, I revered my ancestors. The family graveyard was my sanctuary; and there, too, I learned to look with an affectionate memory upon the stones that bore the names of an infant sister and brother. Hero-worship came with my reading; and in an ideal humanity I found a nobleness to which my nature responded, as it could not to the "glory" of the God of Orthodoxy.

Though glad of any chance that detained me from church, I often spent the time of service in reading the Bible, for the sake of its narrative and poetry. Solomon's Song, Isaiah, and the Book of Revelation were my chief favorites. Later, as I began to think for myself, I chose Shakespeare as good reading for any day of the week; and I still recall the sort of triumph I felt in this reading, on a certain Sunday afternoon, as the people were coming from church.

The natural result of the new seriousness of aim which came with early girlhood was a wish to express my sense of duty and responsibility in life by uniting with the Church. My doubts of much that I heard rated as religious truth were already strong; reflective habits and a secluded life fostered their growth; but I put these aside as unworthy, and strove to mould myself after the Orthodox manner, and to copy the prescribed excellences of the only distinctive religious examples I knew,—the people of the tracts and biographies which now formed my reading. It was only a little less tedious to me than of old, but a belief in its saving efficacy enabled me to pursue it. Books still remained my sole counselors; for, as I lived too far from a village ever to have attended Sunday-school or Confirmation Class, no word of direct religious instruction or appeal had been addressed to me. Nor did the Bishop find anything to say, in counsel or encouragement, when I came alone, a child of twelve, to receive confirmation. But, as I left the solemnities of the church for the deeper solemnities of the starlight night, I silently recorded many fervent vows of lifelong earnestness and devotion,—frail growths all, and destined to be choked by the tares that spring up in such vigor along the dusty ways of life.

The boarding-school to which I soon went afforded all the influences of a devotional life, and I entered into its spirit with eagerness.

On week-days, the chapel-bell rang from five A.M. till a quarter past, marking the time for private devotion. Morning prayer in the chapel followed, lasting half an hour. Attendance at the noon chapel was not obligatory. Still, I often gave up my recess to go, and never omitted attendance on saints' days, when the Communion was administered, and the service was an hour long. Chapel at half-past eight closed the day.

On Sundays, the bell rang at six, and after private devotion, fifteen minutes, came chapel, half an hour; followed by Sunday-school, an hour; morning service, sermon, and Communion in the village church, two hours; afternoon service and sermon in the chapel, an hour and a half; reading of "good books" in the schoolroom, an hour; and fifteen minutes of private devotion ended the day, seven hours of which had been given to religious duties. I think Sir William Jones' rule of life was that of a more "reasonable service":—

"Six hours to law, to soothing slumber seven,
Ten to the world allot, and all to heaven."

Upon many minds the effect of this conventual system was to alienate them from duties that would not have been thought burdensome, had they not been exacted with greater frequency than good judgment approves. No doubt the influence upon others might be such as to foster any tendency to spiritual pride. As for myself, I never found the services too long, as in my childish days; nor was I ever tired of praying out of the fullness of the whole-hearted faith I then, in my simplicity, fancied that I possessed. I never wearied of revering the Church, set up a sort of goddess for our worship, the Holy Mother of the Catholics, under another name. But how little I learned there of the active duties of a Christian life! How easily prayers, hymns, fasting, and obedience may become mere forms of a refined indulgence in the luxury of sentiment!

No one who has once grown cold to this life of mediæval devotion can resume it. Experiences do not repeat themselves. The season of unquestioning confidence, of fervent "piety," quickly passed away, and left few traces. When, after six months of school life, I came home, and could no longer breathe the rarefied atmosphere of the seclusion that had sheltered us from "temptation," my enthusiastic devotion melted away. Doubtless, it was never a part of myself, or possibly the manner prescribed for its expression had been the thing really foreign to my nature, though I had accepted it, through the force of the sympathetic instinct.

My doubts again became a source of uneasiness. I was finding out that one sees with different vision in a Middle State school, conducted by a system borrowed from the Middle Ages, and in a New England home. When the laws of heredity are better known, some more exact estimate can be made of the power of transmitted tendencies; but the beliefs of my ancestry must have wrought in some silent, unfelt way upon my fate. My ancestors of the Huguenot and Puritan lines should have left me a rich spiritual inheritance. But among my forefathers were also those who, though strong in morality, were invariably indifferent or insensible to technical religion. This, indeed, is still the boast of some of their descendants, whose form of spiritual pride appears in an assertion of their independence of needs which most of the race acknowledge. It is a curious study, too, to note their course, to hear them thank God—no, Heaven—that they are not as other men, nor even as this Pharisee. One inclines to the side of the unhappy wearers of phylacteries. One of a few members of this family line, who were ever "professors of religion," was known among his townsmen by the sobriquet of "Christian —," a sufficiently explicit designation, since it at once distinguished him from others of his name and kin. He was a Baptist exhorter of the strictest type, and his intellectual needs were of the simplest. Quakerism has frequently been adopted by the women of this family. One of my remote ancestors, probably numbered among the nouveaux convertés of Rochelle, was early known to me by a letter in which he describes the restfulness of a union with the Unchangeable Church. It was the same repose that I sought in the ritualism that was so well adapted to the wants of another of the race, a churchman after the English fashion. And my ancestor the Puritan, serious, earnest, and, I fear, grave and smileless; my "forbearers" of the "world's people," or of the Society of Friends,—Celt or Saxon, religionist or free-thinker,—are they not each and all entitled to a representative share in the complex nature known by my name?

But these are fanciful speculations. What I am concerned to know to-day is, What is the character of the faith remaining to me after these fluctuations of life and doctrine? The mental conflicts between the contending forces of my implanted beliefs and my individual opinions contributed to make my early years—from fourteen to eighteen—the saddest of my life, as yet. It was a time of "storm and stress." The growth and maturing of convictions—though of the negative order—heavily taxes the slender resources of an undisciplined mind and a character that, in all the crudeness of its early development, is burdened by the presence of the haunting, torturing doubts and questionings that leave us no peace until we have tried our little strength in battle with them. The purchase of growth by pain seems to be Nature's law.

The first dogma which I rejected, and dared to disbelieve, was that of endless punishment. This initial step once taken, my later course was fixed, and my conscience gradually wrought out the harmony of freedom from superstition, combined with voluntary submission to natural law. The doctrine of an inferno was one that I hated not only for the cruelty, but for the cowardice of its uses. I found it ignoble to cultivate devotion

"With the hope of winning heaven Or of escaping hell," and could not be satisfied with anything less than learning to love the right for its own sake. Only when I had separated the ideas of rewards and punishments from the pursuit of virtue, could I begin to live in accordance with my aspirations. I have ever loved severity, and have always been a natural ascetic, if such an expression be not a contradiction in terms.

My perverse inclination to the cause of the minority, and my persistent desire to hear both sides of a story, have spoiled many a convincing polemical disquisition for me. Thus it was that I became favorably disposed to the "Broad Church" party, soon after leaving school, by reading "High Church" literature. Liberal arguments reached me chiefly through the medium of Orthodox confutations; and perhaps they can find no surer way to the acceptance of the young mind, with its unspoiled sense of justice and its noble enthusiasms.

And so the belief I had been taught to revere—the stars that had faintly lighted me—faded out, one by one, and left me to the still paler glimmerings of my own thoughts and intuitions. It is hard, but inspiring to stand alone in the universe. Out of our struggles with doubt and despair is born all that is noble in us. How can we regret any trial that has enabled us to sympathize more deeply, more efficiently, with the troubles of others?

What is my present conception of religion? The spirit of my childhood was that of simple indifference to religious teaching. In girlhood, I grasped at the dissolving shows of religion. In womanhood, I drifted back to the old frank paganism of childish days. There were years in which I rested content with a purely intellectual life, putting aside the thought of religion as something with which I could have no concern. I said, with a natural reaction from the period of pietism through which I had just passed, that, as among Catholics there are but a few who have the true "vocation" for the religious life, so there might be Christians who had no share in the duties of the Church. I remained insensible to the depth of spiritual things. Trouble did not rouse me to devotion, it only hardened me to a stoical endurance. "The beauty of holiness" no longer moved me. Service and sermon spoke in an unknown tongue. I had no need of religion. Not destitute of worthy aims, not without aspiration, I was yet careless of the higher influences in which I had once trusted. Nor can I now think it of so much moment to desire the assurance of a future life as to feel the need of doing our duty in this. It is no crime to be incapable of a dread of annihilation; but it is essential that we should help on the world's work to our utmost.

But the inevitable crisis in the development of my character could not be delayed. This record of individual experiences derives its only value from its truthfulness to a general law. My story is that of many women who reflect and consider, as well as feel; and it comprises the conflicts of many souls in the experiences of one.

It was a personal entreaty that first moved me to weigh again the worth of the ideas and emotions of the past. Taking counsel with myself, I strove to gather up such wrecks of belief as remained to me. May I not hope that out of the ruin of verbal, literal belief has risen the reality of a faith by which I can live?

I can only say that I must believe in a Power of Good, in a Heavenly Father, as our human speech names the Infinite that is above us and about us and around us. But our accents fail, our minds give way, under the burden of the awful thought of God, the conception of eternity. Yes, the thought of God must bring awe and dread: religionists have been unjustly condemned for depicting the Almighty Being as a terrible Ruler, Judge, or Monarch of Men. These views were not groundless: they found a response in the universal mind. They were but the grovelling conceptions of a deep truth. The sectarian who accepts that theory of the universe which involves the belief in eternal decrees, determining the fate of the race,—these to glory, those to perdition,—professes no severer creed than may be formulated from the hypotheses of the student of Nature, as a revelation of her Originator. The scholar speaks of an absolute foreknowledge: the thinker tells us that we are all in the grasp of inexorable law. Is either very far removed from the primitive Greek, with his blind reverence for Fate? We are to-day no wiser than were our savage ancestors of earliest times. Whom they ignorantly worshipped, we worship in spirit and in truth. But the riddle of the universe remains unsolved. The one great change is that, in the sacred courts where the Asiatic fell prostrate, the American holds it no sacrilege, but true reverence, to walk upright. In place of the servile fear by which man once honored the gods, he now cherishes a lofty hope, and thus far is his horizon widened and brightened. Man is not left to spiritual dearth while there remains to him an inalienable, immortal hope.

These are themes too mighty for my contemplation. Whether it be sin, as our fathers taught, that casts this dimness on the spiritual sight, or whether, as the thought of our age affirms, there is no sin, but simply an excess or deficiency of moral development in individuals, it remains true that before the mystery, the soul of the universe, we must cover our faces in awe.

But the truths that Jesus taught stand forth clear in living light. God has not revealed himself to us, but he has taught us to know each other. He has planted deep in our inmost natures the loving sense of fraternal duty. "Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law." So, living here in union with the human, shall we not be on the way to a communion with the divine, there, in the celestial country? I am not saint-like. I do not feel that assurance of heavenly things which the saints enjoyed. But I can live by conscience as a sufficient guide, and I find that the ability to do my duty makes life worth living; while, over and above the consolations of duty, we enjoy its blessedness. Our trust in human beings, our confidence in the utility and beauty of work for them, of love for them, our capability of seeing great qualities in our companions, and our freedom from sordid or petty views,—all these elements of our deepest consciousness are our chief helps in conceiving of God as a Father. I know him not; but I know his children. I may not address him in the set language of prayer and hymn, I may not be able to comprehend the rationale of prayer; but I find inspiration in human faces bright with joy or fervent with the spirit of self-sacrifice. Is not the essence of prayer a turning of our thoughts to God? And can we look in the face of a little child, and not remember the eternal Parent? Love of God I dare not profess, save as some touch of its spirit visits me through love of my neighbor.

And is this all? a religionist might ask. No Scripture, no Christ, no prayer, no church? Many would count me as without God and without hope. Doubtless it is my loss that the Jewish writings are to me the records of a people, Jesus the greatest soul of the race, the sacraments instituted memorials of him, prayer a subjective means of moral culture, the Church an association for the study and practice of virtue. Am I at heart a pagan, owning a nature but partially softened by the amenities of Christian training? Yet I have as deep an inner conviction of these slowly matured, hard-won opinions as those who possess what is called spiritual discernment have of the religious beliefs to which they cling. Who shall say which is right? Can we ever determine, until we meet where we shall know as we are known? In our self-conscious, self-analyzing age, we may not believe with the singleness of earlier times. But only by the loss of belief I have saved faith, if it be faith to trust all these high things to the care of a Father, content to try to do right according to my conscience, and to leave belief and its teaching to those more fortunate than I. This small portion of faith that was granted me will never suffice for holiness, but it may for humble living. By this faith I can live, and in this faith I am not afraid to die. I have no anxieties for the "safety of my soul." We may love our own souls too well. There is a spiritual selfishness. In the hour of death, I would fain share the spirit of the solemn words with which a past generation hallowed the last act of life: "I give my body to the ground; my soul I commit to the keeping of God who gave it." Will he not accept the trust? I can leave all to him. Who can doubt that the Eternal Spirit heeds the earnest aspirations of all earth's children, whether, as in the past, invoked under the names or whether, as in our time, new phases of worship, growing out of the old needs, pervaded by the old spirit of devotion, are adopted by such as call themselves deists, pantheists, theists? These habits of thought originate in separate truths. They are stranded rays of the divine glory of truth. Its full-orbed splendor is too dazzling to be borne by mortal vision. Wisdom, truth, virtue, these are not to be attained by us: it is the quest of them that is our portion. Striving is the sufficient end of life; and in work is the surest happiness. To aim and to endeavor, to fall but to rise again, to learn through defeat to overcome, out of suffering to perfect strength, this is true living.

"Jehovah, Jove, or Lord,"

Many are the ways and means employed in the work of life. Personal gifts must differ in character and degree. Individuals should be judged by their best; and all may safely be left to the free development of their highest tendencies, whether they find expression through mind, heart, or soul. This man makes the laws of a nation, another sings to its fire-sides. Will they naturally unite in obeying the same scheme of belief? Must not each obey the law of his nature? The household poet will perhaps be one of those gentle spirits whose affections are centered in the ideal of a Savior. The other, with sterner fidelity to the intellectual half of his being, may deem that worship alone belongs to the Creator, love to the creature. A Keble may be happier, but is he better than a John Stuart Mill? If one of his purity and elevation of character, his singleness and nobleness of aim, was indeed incapable of holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord, shall we therefore judge him, or hold that the Lord will hide his face from him forever? If he fails to discover the sun at noonday, shall he be condemned for his blindness? Surely, to all darkened, groping spirits, sincere religionists should extend the gentle charity which the poet invokes for Shelley:—

"Breathe for his wandering soul one parting sigh,
O happier Christian, while thine eye grows dim;
In all the mansions of the house on high,
Say not that Mercy has not one for him!"

Atheist he might be, but the negation of belief may leave the conscience unharmed.

An honest demand for the free development of individuality should include no palliation of special forms of selfishness. There is no foe to selfishness like practical Christianity. The wisest and most virtuous among the ancients were scarcely alive to any sense of duty to slaves, quite unaware of human brotherhood with them. The Turk of our time, who, in his strict observance of such moral laws as he accepts, would not, for all the wealth of the West, defraud the meanest Frank, knows no worthier name for the truest follower of Christ than "dog of a Christian." His conscience has never been purified, his heart has never been touched by the keen and searching precepts, the profoundly human charities and amenities of that religion whose disciples he devotes to contempt in time of peace, and in time of war to merciless slaughter. He reveres the name of Allah, written on senseless parchment, but not the living presence of the Deity in his creature. This is the crowning lesson of Christianity; and loyalty to the truest in ourselves, recognition of the best in others, reverence for the divinity in humanity, are the genuine fruits of the teachings of Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost. What is so hard to observe as the daily fulfilment of the law of self-sacrifice? How shall we be interested in the mean and sordid, tender towards the cold and severe, loving and devoted to the stern and unforgiving? It is easy to be warm-hearted towards the few; but how shall we be always kind-hearted towards the many? Yet such benevolence must become the acquisition of all who would be followers of Christ. When we descend to the heart's deep fountains, we shall find them yielding pity for the harshest and coldest, the least human of our fellow-creatures. We must hold them in the kinder charity that we see in them: but the deeper stamp of the same sins we know and deplore in our own natures. There needs not the poet's imagination to picture Cain fearlessly followed in his banishment by a faithful wife and an innocent child. As their pure and loving eyes rest in pity upon that branded brow, so must we look upon the marks of sin and guilt in human countenances, not to wound, not to scathe, but to heal. While we shrink from saying in the language of deeds, to the most indifferent and unfeeling or to the lowest and vilest of our race, "Thou art my brother," or "Thou art my sister," we are still far from that spirit of Christ which we are all striving to share, read his nature, origin, and work as we may. It is enough to believe only in God, since that belief includes all things. God is great, is the watchword of the heathen. God is love, replies the Christian, with his happier revelation. But the real faith of each is founded on an instinctive trust in a Creator who is a Father to his creatures. To cherish that confidence through all "the changes and chances of this mortal life," against the multiplied attacks of sin and sorrow, is surely to possess a living faith. There is one God, the Source of Goodness; there is one prayer, the desire after goodness; there is one service which man may render to his Maker, even that of which it is written, "As ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Now, shall not God, our God, the God of consolation, truth, and love, the God of prayer and aspiration, bring us all at last to the fulness of heavenly consolation, to the perfection of everlasting love, to the fruition of eternal truth?

THE CO-OPERATORS are, we suppose, to be congratulated upon the fact that a bishop,—one no less eminent for his attainments, which entitle him to rank with the foremost of modern scholars, than for his zeal on behalf of the Church,—Dr. Lightfoot, of Durham, has favored their movement with the light of his countenance. We are not of those who look upon bishops as a bull regards a crimson cloth, and therefore we are pleased to see another of England's prelates manifesting some interest in the practical direction of ameliorating the condition of the poor. There are some Fathers-in-God who look upon popular reforms as fraught with peril to religion and as threats against both Church and State, allowing their bigotry to so far overpower their reason as to advise that the reformer should be ducked in a horse-pond. Dr. Lightfoot is not one of these, and the Northern See may be congratulated upon the possession of a prelate at once learned and sensible.—Secular Review.

"I AM VERY MUCH afraid of lightning," said a pretty lady. "And well you may be," replied a despairing lover, "as your heart is made of steel."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"NIL NISI BONUM."

BY MARGARET STEWART SIBLEY.

Give to the living as well as the dead:
Keep not your praises and laurels until
Death the tired worker claims for his own,
And fingers and brain forever are still.

Lay flowers on graves of heroes who died
That country might live, and living be free;
Give honor to those who also were brave,
Who, living to-day, her glory shall be.

"Give to the dead naught but praises," 'tis said:
Nay! let the worthy just honor receive;
If statesman or poet or hero of wood,
Say only the word that you truly believe.

What are all marbles and statues to those Whom, living, the world has stinted for bread?
Give, ere too late, both praise and good cheer;
Give to the living as well as the dead!

"Nil nisi bonum"! 'Twere surely unjust!
Nay, let your wrath on the wrong-doer fall!
If lofty or lowly, if living or dead,
Love for the noble and justice for all!

DEADWOOD, D.T., June, 1880.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 19.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

Unitarian Soc., $3.60; Jas. F. Miller, $10.94; F. E. Abbot, $20.25; D. Bates, $1.75; Mrs. H. B. Bird, $3.20; E. Naumburg, $3.20; J. C. Bentley, $3.20; Mrs. C. P. Wooley, $2; W. Newman, $3.20; A. W. Kelsey, $6; H. S. Curtis, $3.20; A. Haskell, $4.80; Miss A. Hall, $3; Laurett Thompson, $1.60; Louis Mendlik, $5; Dr. W. F. Channing, $2.20; S. G. Coray, $4.27; S. Harrington, $3.20; H. B. Thomas, $1; C. J. Rider, $11.80; Prof. A. P. Lyon, $3.07; J. Seidenberg, $3.20; Chas. H. True, $3; Mr. A. K. Mansfield, $3.20; C. M. Lawler, $3.20; Mrs. M. E. Sawyer, $3; William Kotch, $3.20; A. G. Boynton, $1.60; Mrs. Mary Westphal, $20; Eliza C. Galbraith, $1.70; Henry A. Dean, $3; Ellen M. Mitchell, $5; D. M. Martin, $3.87.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 24, 1880.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAK (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SEUEUR, BENJ. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.

Rationalism is recognition of the natural SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON in all matters of belief and practice. It is equally opposed to the Sovereignty of the Individual (Individualism, moral irresponsibility, anarchy) and to the Sovereignty of Society (Communism, moral tyranny, absolutism of Church or State); but it recognizes at the same time the Sovereignty of the Individual in his Individual Concerns and the Sovereignty of Society in its Social Concerns, reconciled and united in the UNIVERSAL SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON. It is the indissoluble synthesis of liberty and law, the necessary condition of progress and order. It lies at the foundation of republican polity, formulated as Individual Government for Individual Ends, Town Government for Town Ends, County Government for County Ends, State Government for State Ends, National Government for National Ends. It equally lies at the foundation of science, civilization, and Free Religion. It has seven fundamental ethical laws—three of Individuality, three of Society, and one of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

I. Law of Individual Rational Existence.

Every mature rational being has the right and duty to govern himself by his own reason in all his individual concerns. This is the principle of personal self-government, "private judgment," or individual reason.

II. Law of Individual Self-Defence.

Every rational being has the right to defend himself against all encroachments upon his individual self-government. This is the right of resistance to aggression.

III. Law of Individual Non-Aggression.

Every rational being has the duty to refrain from encroaching upon the individual self-government of others, either by force or fraud. This is the principle limiting "private judgment."

IV. Law of Social Rational Existence.

Society (or the community of all rational beings) has the right and duty to govern itself by its common reason in all its common concerns. This is the principle of republican self-government, or social reason.

V. Law of Social Self-Defence.

Society has the right to defend itself against all encroachments upon its social self-government. This is the right of revolution as against tyrants and of self-protection as against criminals—the right of holding aggressors responsible to social reason.

VI. Law of Social Non-Aggression.

Society has the duty to maintain the three laws of individuality in full vigor, and to refrain from violating them. This is the principle limiting social reason.

VII. Law of Ultimate Jurisdiction.

1. The "private judgment" of the individual is the final appeal in all his individual concerns.
2. The "social reason" of society is the final appeal in all its general concerns, and also in cases of ultimate disagreement between individuals.
3. The "social reason" of society is represented in each particular case by the Consensus of the Competent in that class of cases: i.e., by the concurrent verdict of all who are understood by general capacity and special knowledge to be fitted to best. If the competent are divided, the question remains open; if they are unanimous, it is decided.

SPECIAL DONATIONS TO THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION

FOR THE CONTINUED PUBLICATION OF THE INDEX.

LUCRETIA MOTT, Philadelphia	$50.00
JOHN C. HAYNES, Boston	200.00
Mrs. C. P. CUBITS, Boston	10.00
Mrs. C. A. TUCKER, New Bedford	10.00
JACOB HOFFNER, Cincinnati	5.00

PLEDGES.

F. W. CHRISTERN, New York, annually for 5 years,	25.00
R. B. STONE, Bradford, Pa., annually for 5 years...	10.00
SETH HUNT, Northampton, annually for 5 years...	5.00
S. F. MORGAN, New Bedford, annually for 5 years...	25.00
G. F. MATTHEW, New Bedford, 10th annual assessment on INDEX stock.	10.00
JOHN W. CHADWICK, Brooklyn, 10th annual assessment on INDEX stock.	10.00
SAMUEL L. HILL, Florence, annually for 5 years...	100.00

WILLIAM J. POTTER,
Secretary F.R.A.

NOTE.—At the recent annual meeting of the Free Religious Association, the receipts from contributions and membership fees amounted to $226.25.

W. J. P.

PERSONAL NOTICE.

All personal communications for F. E. Abbot should be hereafter addressed to him at "Lake View Avenue, Cambridge, Mass."

NOTICE.

On the 1st of July the office of the Free Religious Association and of THE INDEX, to be published under the auspices of the Association, will be changed to No. 3 Tremont Place, Boston. Correspondents will take note accordingly.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

VALEDICTORY.

BOSTON, June 20, 1880.

TO THE READERS OF THE INDEX:

Dear Friends,—Addressing you for the last time as editor of a journal in which we have all taken so much interest for many years, you will, I trust, pardon me for indulging to some extent in reminiscences of the past, and for offering some friendly parting counsel as to the future. In all probability, this is the close of my public life; but it will not be the close of my life for the public. Although now to be separated from the practical outward movements which have hitherto absorbed so much of my time and effort, and henceforth to be devoted to private pursuits, it is the dearest hope now remaining to me that after a time I may find some leisure still for labor in the cause of higher philosophical and religious truth. The philosophy of Christendom, now that Christianity is so plainly passing away as a system of thought, needs to be reconstituted and reorganized from the bottom up; all the attempts in this direction hitherto made are superficial and inadequate; and the utter chaos of modern life, devoid as this is of all definite guiding principle or aim, is a natural consequence of the intellectual formlessness of the age. Although perfectly conscious that this great evil can be rectified only by the coöperation of many minds and perhaps many generations, there is none the less need of individual labor; and for this there is need of seclusion. Hence it is with more than mere content that I now retire from public life, in the hope that retirement and privacy may make me more useful to my race in the end. Think of me, then, as one who still cleaves to the great cause of humanity, has no other ambition than to serve it faithfully in his fleeting day, and will watch with yearning solicitude the fluctuating fortunes of the battle for truth, righteousness, and love.

Now let me cast a glance backward to the origin of THE INDEX, in events prior to its establishment.

Free Religion, as a definite movement, grew out of Unitarianism by a natural process of evolution. Unitarianism at its birth had two principles—one the inherited principle of fealty to Jesus Christ as Savior, Lord, and King, and the other the great principle (new to Christian history) of unlimited free inquiry. The irrepressible conflict between these two principles broke out in the attempt to organize Unitarianism as a sect. At New York in 1865, and at Syracuse in 1866, the party of traditional Christianity triumphed definitively and finally; a preamble-creed, professing allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ, was adopted and reaffirmed, after a futile attempt to substitute a preamble which would have reconciled the Christian name with perfect spiritual and intellectual freedom. I still think that the decision then arrived at was the most momentous in the whole history of Christianity; for it proved historically the utter inability of the Christian Church, in its most liberalized form, to come to terms of amity and sympathy with the modern spirit. That is the demonstration of its certain ultimate doom; for the final victory of the modern spirit is not doubtful.

The origin of the Free Religious Association was this defeat of freedom at the Syracuse convention in October, 1866, of the "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches." Immediate steps were taken to organize the forces of liberty. Preliminary meetings were held in Boston, at Dr. Bartol's, on October 29 and November 26, 1866, and February 5, 1867; and the Free Religious Association was finally formed at Horticultural Hall, May 30; 1867. All those who took an active part in these various proceedings (of whom I was one) supposed themselves to be really Christians still; but with one mind and heart they left out all mention of Christianity in the name and constitution of the new Association, not because they individually rejected it, but because they deliberately intended to plant themselves collectively, not on CHRISTIANITY, but on RELIGION—because they were unanimously determined to secure "unlimited freedom of inquiry," in a universal SPIRITUAL FELLOWSHIP for the attainment of RELIGIOUS TRUTH according to the SCIENTIFIC METHOD. That purpose was the soul of the new movement; and it is the soul of the future religion of the world.

Now on June 18, 1867—less than three weeks after the formation of the Free Religious Association—I wrote as follows to Mr. Potter, the Secretary, with reference to the practical work most fitting for the new organization, in which I had declined to take any office whatever:—

"Is it not our best plan to aim at the establishment of a first-class weekly paper—an Independent minus its Christism? Suppose it is called the Reformer, advocates every radical improvement in society, strikes out for Humanity (which is not depraved, but divine), and strives to work out the application of this American idea to Church as well as State? It seems to me well to aim high,—not to fritter away energy and means in small projects, but to concentrate all our power on this one thing, and not to begin till we have funds enough to fore-ordain success. I believe that there are wealthy radicals who would be fired by the idea; and the public contains thousands and thousands of minds that must eventually rally to our support. No Liberal Christian, sneering at liberty; no Christian Register, stultifying Christianity; no Independent, depending like a two-year-old child on Christ,—but a bold, free, American journal, with faith in Man as sufficient unto himself, and as the natural heir of God's truth and inspiration. The Boston Commonwealth is good as far as it goes, but it is only a political radical; we need a radical organ that shall apply radicalism in all its height and depth, its comprehensiveness and its power. Our aim would be, not to produce special results, but to regenerate that public opinion out of which results flow. —'s notion of 'evangelization' is out of harmony with radical methods; the Free Religious Association is not the American Unitarian Association in a reduced condition. If the officers of the Free Religious Association decide to make the establishment of such a paper the one grand end (for the present) of our Association, I believe that our success is predestined. How does this strike you?"

The project of establishing a weekly journal devoted to Free Religion, as the organ of the Association, if it could have been then carried out, would perhaps have accomplished more than was possible two years and a half later, when THE INDEX was founded by private enterprise; for attention to and enthusiasm in the new movement was then at its height, and it is always wisest to strike while the iron is hot. But the undertaking was at that time too vast and arduous for the infant society. Besides, a journal founded then could not have taken the advanced position which THE INDEX took at its birth—"outside of Christianity"; those two years and a half brought important developments of the Free Religious idea. It is, however, worth noticing that the first conception of such a journal as THE INDEX was distinctly that of an organ of the Free Religious Association; and it is almost poetically appropriate now that this Association, after an interval of thirteen years, should become formally the heir, proprietor, and conductor of a paper originally founded to promote its own movement.

At the Syracuse Conference, after the rejection of the reform preamble and the reaffirmation of the old one, I had offered a motion that "the preamble should be the platform of the majority only, and not of the whole Conference." The Chairman, Hon. T. D. Eliot, declined to put this motion on the ground that that very motion, made in another form by Rev. J. L. Hatch, had "just been negated by being laid on the table." This fact effectually disposes of the allegation that the preamble-creed was only a "majority vote." Consequently, as I could not and would not publicly profess a creed I did not personally believe, I found myself thrown back upon my own conscience and by it incontrovertibly excluded from the Conference.

Here let me say to the Unitarians (who—to their lasting credit be it spoken—have shown a most fraternal spirit towards the protester against their creed, and among whom he has to-day a great many warm and generous friends) a few frank words, in a spirit as kindly and friendly as their own. To them I say: "I have never questioned your right to have a creed: I have only been unable to see the right of having a creed and disowning it at the same time. Your position will be in every way a stronger and better one, if you do one of two things: either retain your preamble-creed and recognize it publicly as what it really is, or else, if you cannot endure to have a recognized creed before the public, repeal the present preamble altogether and make one in accordance with the fact. It pains me, as it must pain others, and it certainly works evil, that your National Conference should profess a creed in the definite Christian confession of allegiance to the 'Lord Jesus Christ,' and yet that all your individual speakers, at all your public gatherings, should stoutly affirm (as Mr. Robert S. Rantoul, for instance, affirmed at the Essex Conference, at Lawrence, June 18) that 'Liberty is our creed.' No; your creed is the original Christian confession that 'Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God'; and whoever dissents from that creed, embodied substantially and permanently in your fundamental law as a denomination, plants himself nevertheless upon that creed when he acts as a member of the denomination. This is the unanswerable logic of the situation, and there will be gain in every way when it is no longer denied or questioned. I speak without a particle of bitterness, and with no wish in the world but to advance the cause of right thinking and consistent acting; but, even if you think my words the words of an enemy, remember the wise saying—fas est ab hoste doceri."

The necessity of separating from the Unitarian Conference, forced upon me in 1866, coupled with the fact that so few of my old Unitarian associates shared my own scruples, at last grew in my thought into a necessity of separating myself from Unitarianism and Christianity altogether. The last two numbers of THE INDEX have given full information as to my resignation of the Unitarian pastorate in Dover, N.H., the hopeful formation of the Independent Society there, the melancholy collapse of that promising movement, and the law-suit that grew out of it. As a result of all these events, the Supreme Court of New Hampshire issued the following injunction, which is still in force over the Unitarian Society of Dover, and to remove which no effort (so far as I know) has ever been made:—

STRAFFORD, ss. SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT, }
December Law Term, 1868. }

Sam'l Hale et al. vs. Charles E. Everett et al.
Upon hearing the parties and their proofs,
It is ordered—

That the prayer of said Bill be granted, with costs taxed at one hundred and fifty-three dollars and sixty-one cents:

And that Jasper H. York, George L. Folsom, and Carl H. Horsch, wardens of said First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover, and all other wardens and members of said Society, be jointly and severally strictly enjoined and forbidden to hire, employ, allow, suffer, or permit said Francis E. Abbot, or any other person, to preach and inculcate in the meeting-house of said Society doctrines subversive of the fundamental principles of Christianity, as generally received and held by the denomination of Christians known as Unitarians:

Or to employ, suffer, or permit to preach in said meeting-house any person who rejects Christianity altogether, or who teaches that, as a system of religion, Christianity is partly true and partly false:

Or who preaches and inculcates a disbelief in the doctrine of the Lordship and Messiahship of Jesus Christ, as taught by him in the New Testament Scriptures:

Or who preaches and inculcates a denial of the doctrine that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament do contain a Divine Revelation, given by Inspiration of God, and containing a sufficient and perfect rule of faith and practice:

And that said Francis E. Abbot, and all and every other person, or persons, be forever strictly enjoined and forbidden to occupy said meeting-house of said society, for the purpose of preaching and inculcating said disbeliefs, denials, and doctrines, hereinbefore specially prohibited to be taught therein, and every and all other doctrine or doctrines subversive of the fundamental principles of Christianity, as generally received and held by the denomination of Christians known as Unitarians.

IRA PERLEY, Chief Justice.

A true copy of the original decree of Court on file in this office.

Attest: DANIEL HALL, Clerk.

How can any one, in face of the foregoing decree, obtained by the Unitarians of Dover with the assistance of the American Unitarian Association, and acquiesced in by them all for nearly twelve years, assert that Unitarianism has no creed but liberty?

In the summer of 1869, by special request of the Unitarian Society of Toledo, Ohio, and with the definite understanding that I could not in any way connect myself with the Society unless it took the new ground of Independency, I went to that city and stated the case in full. The following circular, issued by the Society, tells the result:—

First Independent Society of Toledo, Ohio.

At a special meeting of the Unitarian Society, of Toledo, Ohio, held August 22, 1869, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, The "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches," in the Preamble to its Constitution adopted at New York in 1865, professed its faith in Jesus of Nazareth as King, Lord, and Christ, thus making a virtual creed its bond of union; and voted down by a large majority the proposition made at Syracuse, in 1866, to abolish this creed and reform the preamble; and at last won the consent of the minority at New York, in 1868, to the retention of the preamble as it stands, unchanged and unchangeable:

Resolved, That we regard this action as inconsistent with the great principle of spiritual freedom.

Resolved, That we regard it as our duty to make earnest and emphatic protest against all such ecclesiastical encroachments upon the liberty of the individual.

Resolved, That our corporate name be henceforth changed from "The Unitarian Society of Toledo" to the "First Independent Society of Toledo."

Resolved, That the Secretary of the American Unitarian Association be requested to erase the name of this Society from the list of Unitarian churches in the denominational Year Book.

Resolved, That the Trustees of this Society be authorized and requested to take all steps which may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

On the adoption of the above preamble and resolutions, the vote stood, yeas, 39; nays, 18.

The Society also extended a call to Rev. F. E. Abbot, late of Dover, N.H., to become its minister for the ensuing year. Upon this question, a large affirmative vote was given, but two votes appearing in the negative.

At the solicitation of members of this society, two of whom guaranteed to defray all losses of the experiment for the first year to the amount of $3,000, I consented to become the editor of a new radical journal. To do this, I very reluctantly postponed plans of philosophical work that I conceived to be of great importance, simply to meet the immediate need of the Free Religious movement, which, as shown above, seemed to me at the outset a need paramount to all others. So THE INDEX was started, and the first issue published January 1, 1870. Its origin, significance, and mission can only be understood fully in the light of the preceding facts. There is no occasion to recapitulate here its history; it is enough to indicate clearly what this paper meant and means, as a part of the religious evolution of our time. The first work I had to do was to justify and elucidate the new departure,—to show the necessity of protesting against Christianity in order to secure freedom for Religion, and to lay positive intellectual foundations for the new order of society that must grow out of so fundamental a change. At the end of two or three years, the idea of a universal religious fellowship, independent of the various special religions and governed in its search for truth by the established method of science, had struck deep root in many minds all over the country.

The relations of this broad and positive conception of religion to the national life seemed next to demand attention; and for over five years, from April, 1872, to October, 1878, the planning and successful launching of the National Liberal League was the great practical work of THE INDEX. If the better class of liberals (by which I mean those whose liberalism is an intelligent aspiration for higher truth, nobler character, and wiser social conditions than Christianity has ever yet given to the world) had only comprehended the depth and scope of the Liberal League movement, with its boundless possibilities of good to themselves and to mankind, they would never have remained so apathetic or indifferent to its success, and never have suffered it to become an engine of incalculable mischief to their own cause in the hands of selfish, immoral, and intellectually imbecile leaders. The real root of this apathy and indifference has been a defective philosophy. Success in any combined movement among liberals, at least on any large scale, must remain impossible, so long as the principle and spirit of mere Individualism is so strong among them; for Individualism is blind to the unities of the world. It is utterly untrue that liberalism, infused with the ideas, aspirations, and inspirations of Free Religion, lacks unity either of thought, of object, or of method. Those who aver this only expose their own mental or spiritual limitations. The time will yet arrive when the best liberals in the land will come back to the original plan of the National Liberal League, to learn how to organize and what to organize for; they will wonder at the shallow criticisms, the pointless objections, the lamentable inappreciation of this generation of liberals, when the day for just appreciation of that plan has dawned. Never did I believe so much in the transcendent utility of the Liberal League to the cause of Free Religion, as I do now, when I see its potency for evil in the hands of evil men. It was exactly what was wanted above all things when it was originally projected—none the less so because, as experience has shown, the good and true liberals of to-day could not perceive the priceless value of the treasure which they carelessly let slip through their fingers into the bottomless deep of sham liberalism.

I am frank in this matter; but I have never been anything else in these columns, as you will all bear me witness, and you have proved your preference for blunt truth-telling over politic compliments. You know how deeply I have at heart the highest interests of our common cause, and you forgive something to that, even if you think me wrong. With this belief, I must now give you the parting counsel of a true friend, and say good-by.

The present outlook of American liberalism is threatening and black. I have boundless faith in its ultimate triumph over all its foes, at home and all over the world; I must lose all faith in its truth before I can lose faith in its triumph at last. But I have been a keen watcher of the weather-signs in the sky of reform for years; and an editor has better opportunity than others for this kind of watching. There is a thunder-storm brewing ahead, unless liberalism is indeed the morally rotten and worthless thing that Orthodoxy says it is. I do not mean a storm from without; that is to be expected at all times. But I do mean a storm from within. Liberalism has got to-day to show what stuff it is made of; it has got to come to a fair and square understanding with itself. For two years and a half, the very worst elements in society (outside of the distinctively criminal classes) have been seizing more and more the control of organized liberal movements; and their ambition is to seize them all at last. I look about me, and ask—what is to prevent their success? Nothing at all, in the present apathy of the liberals at large. Healthy organization has come to a complete standstill; unhealthy organizations are springing up like mushrooms all over the land. To go into the work of liberal organization to-day, without the keen vigilance of which I see no sign at present, would be to play directly into the hands of a party that is an incarnate moral pestilence. Yet liberalism is in its essential nature social and national; its grandest mission is to organize human society into higher forms; and it must begin this great work modestly in local communities. Just as surely as liberalism possesses truth of practical value to human welfare, just so surely must it put this truth into social form. It is evident, therefore, that the present state of things cannot last; it is utterly incredible that the stinging shame of it should be forever borne in meekness and submission by the intelligent, pure, upright people who compose the vast majority of the liberals. A reaction will surely come; but it cannot, now that the party of license have entrenched themselves so strongly, come without a tempest. A determined struggle must yet break out between the genuine and the sham. It will cost no little effort to recover all that has been so unwisely and unnecessarily lost, but the price must be and will be paid. My one brief piece of advice is: Pay it, and at once. Have done with blindness, indifference, and moral paralysis; tolerate no longer, as your leaders and representatives, men who are not liberals at all, but libertines; fight to the bitter end the battle of liberty and morality united against the licentiousness that palms itself off as freedom and the fraud that masks itself as truth; shrink no longer from this inevitable conflict because it demands personalities, and not pointless moral platitudes. There is no future for Free Religion if it cares for none of these things, or does not care enough to fight for them. Now that I lay down my long task of editorship, it gives me gladness of heart to remember that THE INDEX has fought this battle resolutely, though nearly alone, for two years and a half; I am more proud of the scars won in this contest, hateful as is the necessity of waging it, than of any laurels won in earlier years. The ultimate failure or success of the whole Free Religious movement hinges on its power to create a bold, vigorous, indomitable spirit of self-assertive and aggressive righteousness in this very issue. If it fails here and now, it fails everywhere and forever; for mankind has too much shrewd sense to follow any religious movement which forgets, evades, or even does not know, its own chief social and moral obligations. The brief counsel I bequeath is—draw your sword, fling away the scabbard, and earn by courage the confidence of mankind.

But I must close. It is painful to sever the tie which has bound me to so many warm, true, noble hearts throughout the land; the affectionate letters sent to me of late show that the tie has been felt on both sides; but I cannot dwell on this here. May the same confidence and good-will be extended to my successor, in whom you will all find an inestimable treasure. No one man is essential to any vital move ment in human life or thought; and Mr. Potter will quietly steal into your hearts before you know it, just as he always does wherever he is known. My undivided sympathy and most earnest hope for his success attend him, as he takes the place to which I have been used so long; and my fervent desire is that you will all faithfully support him in labors for our common cause, which I know to be both difficult and exhausting. Be generous to him, as you have been to me.

And now good-by, dear friends, good-by!

Faithfully yours, FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RETROSPECT AND PROSPECT.

For a number of months my initials have appeared with less frequency than formerly in these columns. This has been from no diminution of sympathy with the work of THE INDEX, from no disposition to withdraw from the side of its valiant editor; but solely, at the first, because of distracting domestic cares and anxieties, and latterly because of the ease with which a habit of inactivity is continued. Soon the readers of the paper will see me in this place, as they are only too sadly aware, often enough to atone for all delinquencies of this kind; and in view of this I might now well spare them any further words of mine till that necessity comes.

Yet, associated as I have been with Mr. Abbot in these pages from the very beginning of the enterprise,—appearing with him here in the first number issued and in so many numbers of every year since,—I cannot now resist the strong impulse which I feel to join hands with him in the last number which, so far as now seems probable, is to come forth under his vigilant care. My part in the work has been small, my responsibility very slight; yet I have been proud to render such aid as I have been able to give to so faithful and vigorous a workman.

And now that our work here comes to a "parting of the ways," and his editorial mantle, which I fear I shall but unworthily wear, drops upon me, I am painfully conscious not only of assuming the burden of a grave responsibility, and not only of the withdrawal from this field of labor of a dominant intellectual force not easily supplied, but also of a more personal bereavement: a friend and comrade with whom I have been travelling for many years leaves my side, and I find myself on the road alone. Before the establishment of THE INDEX, he and I were drawn together. From the first inception of the Free Religious Association, nearly fourteen years ago, we clasped hands in fealty to a common cause, and ever since we have walked on this free religious pilgrimage together, side by side; separated to a considerable extent from our former fellow-travellers, yet strong in our own companionship; not always seeing eye to eye,—having free and independent brains, that were hardly possible or desirable,—but always heart to heart.

But, though the outward ways now part, the old fealty remains unbroken. Circumstances take our friend away to another vocation. But his loyalty to free religious principles is unshaken, his interest in their progress and successes not one whit abated; and we will hope that this is only a temporary withdrawal from their public advocacy,—the entering of a by-path which will before many years lead out into some other sphere of labor in their behalf even more important and more permanently serviceable. Our best wishes go with him. And we know that his best wishes stay with us whose duty it is to remain at this post, and that he will watch our work here with the same unselfish, faithful regard with which he watched his own. Nor will his able pen wholly desert us. In the midst of his new cares and labors, he cannot promise to assume the burden of any other regular work; but it is with the greatest satisfaction, in which I am sure the readers of THE INDEX will share, that I am permitted to announce that he will still appear here as an occasional contributor. Come when he will and in whatever guise of topic, he will come as one "to the manner born,"—will come to his own and find his own place warm with affectionate welcomes for him.

W. J. P.

THE "CHRISTIAN AMENDMENT."

Slowly, but surely, the Protestant Christian sentiment of the country is identifying itself with the ominous movement for inserting an explicit recognition of Protestant Orthodox Christianity in the preamble of the United States Constitution. The United Presbyterian General Assembly, one of the most powerful religious bodies in the country, has passed these resolutions at its annual convention:—

WHEREAS, It pleased God in His eternal purpose to choose and ordain the Lord Jesus, His only begotten Son, to be the Heir of all things, and Judge of the world, by virtue of which appointment he exercises a dominion over all created persons and things, which dominion all intelligent beings to whom He has been revealed are bound to acknowledge in their respective stations and relations; and

WHEREAS, The Constitution of the United States contains no explicit recognition of God, or of the supremacy of His law, or of the subjection of the nation to the Lord Jesus Christ: therefore

Resolved, That this omission, whether due to oversight or intention, is a serious defect in that otherwise excellent instrument, and one which should, by legal and constitutional means, be removed.

Resolved, That Christianity is the vital and essential principle of free government. The prosperity of the nation and its permanence depend, therefore, on the maintenance of its Christian character. When it shall voluntarily bring itself into a proper relation to the Author of its existence, and to His Son, exalted to be the "Prince of the kings of the earth," then "our land shall yield its increase, and God, even our God, shall bless us."

IN ALL the disappointments of life, the soul governed by devotion to truth and duty enjoys abiding peace.

MR. UNDERWOOD has an excellent letter to Bishop Lynch, of Toronto, in the Graphic of that city, in reply to the Bishop's circular against the Free Thought Association.

A CENSUS of the Society of Friends shows that it has about 88,000 members: namely, in the United States and Canada, 66,850; England, 14,725; Ireland, 3,948; other countries and missions, 3,500.

ARCHBISHOP LYNCH, of Toronto, has sent a circular letter to the Catholic clergy of his diocese, exhorting them to warn their young men against attending the Free Thought Society of that city.

"WHEN PEOPLE are hopelessly ignorant of a thing," satirically remarked that brilliant scientific genius, Professor W. K. Clifford (Lectures and Essays, I. 140), "they quarrel about the source of their knowledge."

IT is a cause of regret that a paragraph concerning the Norwegian poet, Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson, copied as a mere item of news into THE INDEX of January 10 from some now forgotten source, seems to have been inaccurate and unjust. The London Christian Life, in an article of some length, very courteously calls our attention to the fact; and we gladly make all the reparation in our power by reproducing the correction.

CARLYLE SAYS: "What can it profit any mortal to adopt locations and imaginations which do not correspond to fact,—which the most orthodox of mortals can only, after infinite and essentially impious efforts to put out the eyes of his mind, persuade himself to believe that he believes? What is incredible to thee thou shalt not at thy soul's peril attempt to believe. Go to perdition if thou must, but not with a lie in thy mouth, by the Eternal Maker, no!"

THE Christian Union, replying to a correspondent's inquiry as to a statement on a question of scholarship made in the Boston Investigator, remarks with equal truth and point: "You may well distrust anything that appears in the Investigator, not because it is the organ of infidelity, but because it is the organ of an ignorant and an intolerant infidelity." There is a significance in that remark which the liberals of America will do well to lay to heart. They cannot afford to sustain an "ignorant and intolerant" press,—much less a press that is indecent, vicious, and malignant.

THE REPUBLICAN platform at Chicago contained this plank: "The Constitution wisely forbids Congress to make any law respecting an establishment of religion, but it is idle to hope that the nation can be protected against the influences of sectarianism while each State is exposed to its domination. We therefore recommend that the Constitution be so amended as to lay the same prohibition on the legislature of each State, and to forbid the appropriation of public funds to the support of sectarian schools." For the last time, we counsel the liberals of America to watch keenly the course of legislation on this subject, and see to it that the studied ambiguity of that word "sectarian" is not employed to give Protestant Orthodoxy, as professed "unsectarianism," a dangerous foothold in the Constitution. This danger is most real.

LET THE LIBERALS of America learn a lesson from the remarks of Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of Cohens vs. Virginia: "It is most true that this court will not take jurisdiction if it should not, but it is equally true that it must take jurisdiction if it should. The judiciary cannot, as the legislature may, avoid a measure. Because it approaches the confines of the Constitution, we cannot pass it by because it is doubtful. With whatever doubts or whatever difficulties a case may be attended, we must decide it, if it be brought before us. We have no more right to decline the exercise of jurisdiction which is given than to usurp that which is not given. The one or the other would be treason to the Constitution. Questions may occur which we would gladly avoid, but we cannot avoid them." Questions of the gravest nature are now before the liberal public; they may be neglected, but not in consistency with enlightened duty. The "repeal" question, the "free-love" question, and in general the relation of liberty to morality, imperatively demand discussion and settlement according to the true genius of liberalism. As represented by the majority of its organizations, liberalism has been artfully and unscrupulously misled into answering those questions wrongly; it is the supreme interest and prime duty of all organized liberal bodies to raise those questions once more and answer them aright. The answers given to those questions by THE INDEX in the past will yet be confirmed by the enlightened decision of the entire American people.

EVEN THE MILWAUKEE Freidenker, which has done its utmost to justify the capture of the National Liberal League at Syracuse by the free-love ring, and which has credulously followed its lead ever since, now begins to be aghast at the prospect of seeing Bennett and Rawson sent to Europe as the acknowledged and accredited delegates of the liberals of this country; and it ventures now a pitifully feeble and timid protest against this fathomless humiliation to the whole liberal movement. It apologetically whispers: "One may judge ever so mildly the past of these men, yet they do not appear to us to be suitable representatives of our cause; at least there are other and better ones to be found." Poor Freidenker! It has done its best, half-ignorantly, yet none the less perversely, to make these men its own masters; and now it groans under their yoke. It has been their willing cat paw and tool, only to be dragged by them into the mire and abandoned with a kick; for it is easy to see how Bennett and Rawson will take this timid rebuke from their late bondman. The Boston Investigator, however, is not even as brave as the Freidenker. Horace Seaver is more foxy than C. Hermann Boppe; where Boppe faintly and stammeringly protests, Seaver shrewdly dodges, as follows: "Our friend Rawson, of New York, inquires in a postal card, 'How about the Brussels Congress?' It meets, as our readers are aware, in August next, and, if we are not mistaken, it is intended to be something like a World's Convention of Freethinkers or Liberals. Of course the United States and Canada should be represented in that body, and though we cannot attend, yet we should be very glad if some one or more of our able brethren, like Col. Ingersoll, Hon. Elizur Wright, or T. B. Wakeman, Esq., could make it convenient to visit Europe and represent the American Liberal cause in the Brussels Congress." No protest here, but an artful nomination of other delegates! All to no purpose, however; Bennett and Rawson will go to Brussels, and they will use the whip on Seaver no less than on Boppe, when they get ready. O Liberalism, Liberalism, to what depths hast thou descended! And what bitter dregs of the cup of humiliation art thou yet destined to drink!

HENRY CABOT LODGE writes very justly of the Constitution in the International Review, as follows: "The Constitution," says Dr. Von Holst, page 72, "is not the faultless masterpiece which Americans, for the most part, esteem it to be." This is a brief reiteration of some elaborate opinions in the first volume, and seems to show a serious misconception of the true merits of the Constitution and of the feeling of Americans in regard to it. It is a statement which reveals with fresh vividness the gulf that divides the English race from the nations of Europe in all matters of practical government. Not one of the men who set their hands to the Constitution was satisfied with the whole of it, and no one ever supposed it to be ideally perfect. If it had been, it would not have lasted a month, but would have been speedily consigned to the limbo of perfect constitutions such as are devised by Frenchmen and Spaniards. The Constitution was the creature of circumstances: it was the best that could then be made, and was, as nearly as possible, an exact representation of what everybody wished, although it satisfied nobody entirely. It was wise, judicious, very loose in many respects, and full of compromises. It was the genuine and legitimate work of the race which produced it. It could be indefinitely supplemented by unwritten law, so dear to the hearts of English people, who then tried their first experiment with a written constitution. In one word, it solved the problem, was a practical success, and has performed the work for which it was devised. It is on this account that Americans venerate the Constitution, and 'esteem it a faultless masterpiece,' and not because they think it an ideally perfect plan, such as comes fresh from the head of the last speculator on government. The only test of a constitution is success. The unwritten constitution of England and the written one of the United States have succeeded where all others have failed; and they are, therefore, great achievements. They demonstrate the political sagacity of their authors; and the people who live under them would be false to their best instincts and noblest traditions, if they did not reverence them as masterpieces of human wisdom. It will be an evil day for the cause of good government when they cease to do so."

Communications.

A FAREWELL GRASP OF THE HAND.

[With hesitation, and almost with compunction, we send the following letter to the printer, for insertion in our last INDEX. It is too generous, and we dare not accept its praises; yet it is so appreciative of what we believe to be central truths of Free Religion, that the impulse is irresistible to give them new emphasis for our readers, by presenting them once more as thus reaffirmed by another's mind. The numerous similarly warm-hearted letters we have lately received, and the kindly notices of the press, have all been kept to myself, lest they should unnecessarily intensify regret for our departure, and impair the welcome which we fervently covet for the dear friend who is to succeed us; but we must here thank all the writers with a full heart, just as we thank the brave soldier who, as editor of the Independent Age, of Alliance, Ohio, formerly fought a stout battle for public righteousness, and who now gives us a parting blessing below. Let us assure him, however, that under Mr. Potter there will be no lowering of the standard or tone of THE INDEX,—verily, no! His methods will be his own, as they ought to be; we would not for worlds saddle him with ours, or the tradition of ours. Give him the same generous confidence which has so encouraged us, and all our old friends will soon learn what a treasure they possess in the new editor, who is every inch a man.—ED.]

MY DEAR BROTHER ABBOT:—

The last few numbers of THE INDEX make me more than ever before unreconciled to the idea of your leaving the editorial chair. True, the brave, vigorous, aggressive, grand old INDEX may still be in able and willing hands, and conducted by clear heads and hearts beating in sympathy with the great heart of struggling humanity; and yet I fear that it may not hew to the line (regardless of where the chips may fall) with such an unerring hand as heretofore. By some means, you seem to have been guided into all truth, or at least to the very heart of the truth upon all subjects that you have touched, and have ever been enabled to carry aloft with manly dignity and quiet serenity the noble banner of purity and truth, regardless of personal consequences.

To us Spiritualists, it appears apparent that angelic aid has been kindly vouchsafed to you in your grand and noble work for humanity during the past ten years. Your ability to epitomize and condense the good things of advanced thinkers, and sift out the chaff and dross, and give to the world the pure and unadulterated article, truth, in all its native strength, beauty, and simplicity, has been really phenomenal amid the wordy vaporings of unscientific philosophers and pseudo-reformers; and we only explain it by saying, "Surely, the good angels help Brothet Abbot, though he is not a Spiritualist." And may they continue thus to assist, lead, console, strengthen, and inspire—yes, "inspire"—you in whatever field of labor you may engage.

Some of your late bold, manly utterances are in such marked contrast with the more timid sayings of other really good men, who see less clearly than you the drift and the inner and to them hidden meaning of great truths, that I cannot forbear referring to them in this connection, and repeating a few of them, hoping thereby to fix them more indelibly in the minds of some who will refer with pleasure to them in future years, when their full force and beauty will more clearly be seen:—

"Great souls are the milestones of human progress. They do not make it so much as they measure it. They sum up in themselves the tendencies of an epoch, and condense the unuttered thought of myriads into speech which the myriads accept as their own."

"The freedom of science is unlimited save by the universal laws of logic and of verification; and that, neither more nor less, is the freedom of FREE RELIGION."

This latter quotation verifies the truth of the former. Who else could or would have expressed this grand truth in so terse and emphatic language?

"Philosophy needs to be reformed exactly as much as religion; and the reform it needs is exactly the same,—namely, the substitution of the scientific method for the old method of dogmatism."

This reminds one of the steady, deliberate cut of the skillful surgeon, as he draws the dreaded scalpel upon the morbid, life-absorbing tumor on the person of an intimate friend. He shrinks not, swerves not, neither does his hand tremble, though he knows that he is giving great pain and cutting close to a vital point. Many of our over-wise philosophers will do well to con over this sentence with care and humble reflection:—

"SCIENTIFIC PHILOSOPHY, therefore, or well-digested, well-arranged, and well-applied knowledge of the universe we dwell in, is the Guide of Life that Free Religion offers to mankind. And to affirm and practise this principle is the 'STEP NEXT.'"

I thank you, Brother Abbot, and coming generations will thank you, for the manly utterance of this grand truth in this age of hesitancy, weak-kneed, cringing, and timid subservience to old customs and old forms of thought and stereotyped modes of expression.

But here, to me, is the climax of self-reliance and manly, heroic daring, when you criticize so gently and kindly the good Dr. Adler, and with one stroke of your inspired pen brush away the mist and slow-retiring fog of agnostic philosophy:—

"No agnosticism for us! We believe in the power of the human mind to master every difficulty in the long run, and to answer every reasonable question which it can propound to itself; and God, freedom, and immortality are reasonable questions. If philosophy has as yet arrived at no established truth on these great questions, it is solely because philosophy needs to be reformed as fundamentally as religion, and precisely in the same way; namely, by the substitution of the objective scientific method for the method of subjective dogmatism."

What! God and Immortality reasonable questions! To be solved by the "human mind"? Theology stands aghast at such presumption; and timid, time-serving philosophers shake their heads in distrust and doubt. But every ardent soul who is struggling in the last coils of inherited superstition and the slowly dissolving mists of early dogmatic teaching will thank you for thus formulating this rising truth and daring to give it utterance. That sentence is worthy to be inscribed upon the monument of a world's friend: "GOD, FREEDOM, and IMMORTALITY are reasonable questions."

Allow me, in conclusion, to say that, though I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance, I shall miss you, and part with you now with regret, as you retire from the editorial chair which you have honored and elevated for the past ten years. Into whatever channel of humanitarian work you may be led, I shall follow you with a heart beating in warmest sympathy, and a mind that has received new strength, new light, new aspirations, and higher aims by means of your writings, which have ever breathed the spirit of toleration, purity, freedom, a sincere love and reverence for truth for its own sake, and a noble, generous manhood. And I feel confident that I but express the views and feelings of thousands in these hastily written words of friendship and appreciation.

Sincerely and fraternally yours,

S. BIGELOW.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., June 15, 1880.

THE RELIGIOUS SENTIMENT.

Diverging somewhat from the line foreshadowed in a former paper, I wish to enlarge upon a branch there but imperfectly presented; namely, the genesis and nature of the religious faculty itself. What is its meaning? Out of what conditions does that part of our mental constitution arise, and what useful purpose does it serve?

Its characteristic expression I take to be homage towards a superior power from whom we receive favors and against whose anger we are powerless. Among savage peoples, its rites are such as would placate a savage chieftain. With improved manners, incense, song, and praise become prominent. Its most refined manifestation consists in moods and acts implying conscious identification with and absorption into the Supreme Will. Where the entire mass of feeling is transformed into love, there is, of course, all the more implied a superior person loving and lovable or hating and hateful. Considered historically or introspectively, I cannot be mistaken in holding that a personal relation as of sovereign and subject is the universal, essential, and central characteristic of this sentiment.

So much for what this faculty or disposition is. Now, considering it as a resultant of the interaction of the organism and the environment, the question is, What is that particular force in the environment that makes up the external factor of this product? Clearly, since it implies a personal relation, it points to some great fact in the social environment of our race; and the question is, What specifically is that experience which our race, rising from brute to human, has had, which being capitalized and transmitted from generation to generation became the religious sentiment? We may be sure it has not been commerce with imaginary beings. A piece of paper flying before the wind may excite terror in the mind of a horse; but nothing short of exposure to the ravages of powerful beasts could have produced and developed the faculty of fear.

Given a person who is the depository of a million generations of ancestral experiences of the arbitrary power of a cannibal chieftain, what could he be but a cringing craven, like a savage devotee? The disposition would be inwrought, and a constituent part of his mental structure. Now add a belief in ghosts retaining their fleshly appetites and partialities, now taking possession of living persons and anon invisibly interfering with the affairs of the tribe, and it would be easy to deduce a religious faculty and a cult essentially like what we know exists among savage peoples.

The primitive man makes no such distinction as we make between the human and the divine. With him, gods are very flesh and blood persons; the difference between them and other persons being only one of degree of power. Nor does he make any distinction between the natural and supernatural. With him, everything that occurs comes by an arbitrary will; and supernatural are distinguished from other events only as being more unusual and imposing, and so implying a superior will. In other words, the primitive man did not rise to the conception of natural causation. That came only with dawning enlightenment. True this conception dominates all right thinking, and is the measure of all intellectual advancement; yet to this day the mass of intelligent people vehemently repudiate its application to the higher problems. It is conceded to be proper and edifying in "dead matter," but quite out of place in problems of life and mind.

This anthropo-centric mode of explaining things is as natural and inevitable to the primitive man as was his geocentric astronomy, of which it was the counterpart, and is as easy of explanation. The human will, as an agent of the changes that take place, is so familiar, it was to be expected that rude people would attribute everything to it. To explain a thing is to classify it with something already known. The best known—I do not mean critically or analytically understood, but the nearest, most familiar and frequently recurring—effect-producer was the human will; and it could hardly be otherwise than that it should come to be considered the universal cause. Accordingly, primitive philosophy is the indiscriminate ascription of all events to spirits in the body or out of it. Prof. Fiske tells us that scientific advancement is essentially and only a process of de-anthropomorphism.

It is not this property of anthropomorphism common to all primitive thinking, however, but something deeper and more intractable, we have to deal with here. It is that the religious sentiment by its constitution demands and must have a person for its object. Finding kings, lords, and masters in their best estate fallen into desuetude in the actual relations of society, its force is spent upon a purely ideal object; and, cut loose from all material limitations, the loving and loyal heart invests that object with all conceivable excellence and power.

Of course, a weak sentimentalism will deny the truth of my theogony, and resent all of its implications as degrading. A sickly sentimentalism does not want to understand from how lowly beginnings and what common dirt Nature produces her choicest flowers and fruit. If one would know by what steps the earthly potentate was translated to the skies, retaining authority with the tribe, and then became invested with universal sovereignty, let him study the history of primitive thought and customs, and learn how all religious observances were originally funeral rites of great leaders, and cults were primitively only a part of government machinery.

If, then, subjection for ages to rude autocrats has generated and developed this sentiment, and fastened upon it modes and moods appropriate to such a subjugation,—moulding human nature into a disposition and aptitude implying an arbitrary sovereign will,—what may be expected when the external factor is gone from the practical relations of society? We have a set of faculties for which there is no longer any appropriate object, and one must needs be invented. These faculties are still constituent parts of human nature. Upon them the speculative intellect constructs institutes of theology and cosmogonies. They are the "Intuitions" the "Necessities of Thought" that give force to the arguments of natural religion and conviction to the devotee. But, if I am correct, these faculties are reminiscent only.

When we reflect how impotent an individual is, especially against his fellows who are ever his worst foes or at least competitors; how he becomes strong only by incorporation into some social aggregate or tribe, which prevails in the struggle for existence by virtue of its more complete consolidation; how tenacity of tribal coherence is its vital strength; how that coherence can be maintained only by enforcement of central authority, that so the sentiment of subordination becomes fixed and strong in the individual,—we understand how that sentiment was the chief condition of survival, and as such came to have the coercive quality it has. Considering how terrible a fact outlawry was, it is easy to account for the sense of desolation and orphanage its ideal counterpart will occasion.

But now that individualism and equality have, in the chief relations of society, taken the place of absolutism, the ancient virtue of loyalty has become transformed into observance of the law; and all that in the religious sentiment, which cannot become morality and devotion to impersonal truth, must necessarily atrophy. True, the disposition to worship is a part of the human mind; but being a portion that is out of harmony with the environment is of little and lessening use in civilized societies. Prostrations and genuflections and the moods they symbolize are no longer practised in government or family. With the increase of Ben Abou's tribe, divine service will more and more become human service, if indeed "divine" like so many other ecclesiastical words shall not fall hopelessly into the limbo of damaged phraseology. Human uses and not God's glory, except as interpreted to be identical with it, is in modern apologetics the criterion of supreme worth. Religion "and" morality is the form in which appeals for favor to the Church now come. The cultivation of the emotions as an end apart from the practical activities, of which they are the flavor and relish, is a morbid industry, and will more and more become confined to those who have fallen out of the line of the world's progressive march. Even as a balm for broken lives, it is coming to be seen that there is more real healing in the humblest human service than in pious asceticism and the exaltations of mystic emotion. All indications point to a change of sentiment, of theory and practice, in this realm, analogous to that by which astrology became astronomy, and alchemy chemistry; and I cannot doubt that superpersonal law shall take the place of aristocratic dominance; and loyalty to natural truth and human uses will absorb what is best in the religious sentiment, and the remainder will be the "Old Adam" which it is the part of wisdom to put under our feet.

E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, O., May, 1880.

CHARLES C. BURLEIGH.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Sunday, June 6, the exercises of the Free Congregational Sunday-school of Florence were in commemoration of the life of C. C. Burleigh, the occasion being the second anniversary of his last meeting with the school. The morning lesson was upon "Character." The general exercises included the reading of memorial sonnets, written by George W. Burleigh, Mr. Wasson's lines on "Royalty," some extracts from Mr. Burleigh's writings, and remarks by Mr. Hunt, Mr. Lilly, and Mr. Hinkleley, of Providence.

At the close of the session, the school went in procession to the cemetery, to lay flowers upon the graves of Mr. and Mrs. Burleigh.

E. C. ELDER, Supt. F. C. S. S.

FLORENCE, Mass., June 12, 1880.

Memorial Sonnets.

C. C. B.

BY GEORGE W. BURLEIGH.

I.

THE REFORMER.

Erect and dauntless, we have seen thee stand
Where loudest rang the clarion of Reform,
In the long conflict's gloomiest thunder-storm,—
One of a Hope Forlorn to save a land;
Serenely, sublime, unconquerably grand,
Waging God's battle on the alien swarm
Of the oppressor, with truth's fiery brand
Flashing with terrible beauty in thy hand!
Bayard of Freedom's matchless knights, a crowned
Soul "without fear, without reproach," kept pure
Where even the altar and its "holy ground"
Reeked with the stench of slavery's bloody sewer!
No rest, no rage impaired thy action great;
Patient as perfect faith, invincible as fate!

II.

THE LOGICIAN.

We saw thee on thy mountain peak sublime,
In the cool air of Reason clear and keen,
Gather th' invading fogs sent up to screen
From God's accusing azure the fens of crime,
And flake by flake in stars of glittering time
Build the resistless glaciers of thy theme,
Whose rigorous, still, impenetrable stream
Ground into dust the frauds of oldest time.
Old Bondage, bulwarked by a church's wall,
The bloody gibbet,—a transmuted cross,—
Wars' million murders sanctified by all
Her hireling priests, false faiths, and gods of dross,
Felt through their crumbling fortresses the weight
Of all thy crystalline thought borne down in stern debate.

III.

THE BROTHER.

Wert thou alone the dauntless champion,
The strong right arm of freedom pioneers,
We might have been too glorified for tears
In the great joy of victory; the "Well done!"
Of plausive heavens had drowned the earthly moan,
When the eye saw thee lost in loftier spheres!
But, oh, my brother, whom my soul reveres
With that great love which answers love alone,
Tender and true, though dwelling far apart
In inaccessible thoughts,—all through and through,
The Eternal Mother tempered thy strong heart
With her eternal sweetness, till it grew
Perpetual benediction, from thine eyes'
Unsuited azure shed like light from fathomless skies!

IV.

THE ALL-BROTHER.

Ah, not alone our circle,—so narrowed here,
So broadening there on that strange outer coast
We dream of, and thou wakenest to,—hath lost
A more than brother,—by the baby's bier,
Mothers who bless thee, strong men bowed with fear
Of their grim gods,—who, rising jubilant, tossed
Their chains away in the new Pentecost
And plucked thy garment, looking up, pure-eyed,
With a sweet silent confidence to claim
Thy blessing on them; aye, and from our wide
Humanity, the poor of every name,
Loving or suffering, mourn thee, even as we
Who are thine by hands that clung to the same mother's knee.

A NEW SUNDAY MOVEMENT.

[The following has been received from Mr. Mark H. Judge, of London, with request to print, which we cheerfully do.—ED.]

A meeting of ladies and gentlemen interested in providing additional means for bringing the influences of Literature, Science, and Art, and particularly Music, into closer relation with the life of the people during their leisure time, was held at 27 Upper Bedford Place, W.C., on Saturday last, under the presidency of Mr. W. Coupland, M.D. The chairman in opening the proceedings read the circular which had been issued concerning the meeting, as follows:—

"We invite you to attend a meeting at 27 Upper Bedford Place on Saturday next, at 4 o'clock, for the purpose of considering the desirability of forming an association for promoting and arranging on Sunday evenings cheerful and entertaining gatherings conducted on a Liberal Religious basis, so as to bring together on a common platform those who are willing to coöperate for this practical object outside all questions of theology. The idea is to arrange for meetings in which music shall form an important feature, and with which lectures, readings, and exhibitions of interesting objects, etc., may be associated from time to time. As you have shown an interest in other movements for improving the use of Sunday, we hope you will be able to be present at this meeting, and that you will give your support to the association, if formed.

"We are, yours truly,

"ADA BERRY.

"MARK H. JUDGE."

Letters were read from Mr. James Heywood, F.R.S., Mr. F. D. Mocatta, Mr. T. Chatfield Clarke, Prof. C. J. Plumtre, Miss M. E. Richardson and Miss Edith Simcox of the London School Board, Miss Orme, Dr. and Mrs. Hoggan, M.D., sympathizing with the object of the meeting.

Mr. Mark H. Judge proposed the following resolution:—

"That an association be now formed under the title of 'THE SUNDAY EVENING ASSOCIATION,' to bring together all persons who, estimating highly the elevating influence of music, the sister arts, literature and science, desire by means of meetings on Sunday evenings to see them more fully identified with the religious life of the people."

Mr. Godfrey Shaen seconded this resolution, which, after a long discussion, was carried unanimously.

Mrs. Anna Perrier then proposed, Mrs. Edward Berry seconded, and it was resolved:—

"That the management of the Association until May, 1881, be intrusted to a General Committee to be now appointed, with power to add to its number, and that the Committee report to a General Meeting of the Association in May, 1881."

The Committee was then appointed; and Mrs. Edward Berry undertook to act as Honorary Secretary until the first meeting of the Committee. Votes of thanks to Mrs. Berry for allowing the meeting to be held at her residence, and to Mr. Coupland for presiding, brought the meeting to a close.

PERSONAL ITEMS.

REV. M. J. SAVAGE sailed last Saturday for Europe. Mr. Savage cannot fail to appreciate the sights and opportunities of the Old World; and he has fairly earned his vacation.

MR. GILES B. STEBBINS makes the question, After Dogmatic Theology, What? the title of a book he has just given to the public. Mr. Stebbins' answer is, Spiritualism. There is still an opportunity for others.

THE SABBATH ASSOCIATION of Massachusetts has issued a circular to the clergymen of the State, asking them to preach against Sunday excursions. If we mistake not, we have read in the New Testament that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." Would it not be well for those strict Sabbatarian gentlemen to look up the passage, "and when found make a note of it?"

REV. GEORGE CHAINNEY, who recently severed his connection with Unitarianism at Evansville, Ind., offers the following as the basis of membership for a new society there: "We whose names are here recorded do hereby organize ourselves into a society, that by unity of effort we may maintain liberty of thought, and do all in our power to promote the physical, intellectual, and moral elevation of humanity. Any person may become a member of this society by recording or causing his or her name to be placed upon its list of membership."

THE Truth Seeker publishes a letter addressed to Mr. O. B. Frothingham in Europe, inviting him to represent, at the Brussels Congress of Freethinkers, something in New York called the "Society of Humanity," of which the leading spirits are those who were foremost in the raid on the Syracuse Congress two years ago, and in getting up the late reception to the apostle of their "religion," D. M. Bennett. As Mr. Frothingham has been for over a year in Europe in impaired health, and strictly prohibited by his physicians from every kind of mental excitement and exertion, it is more than probable that this liberty with his name is taken without the slightest prospect of success; but it serves a very artful purpose, notwithstanding. In regard to the Congress of Brussels, it would be well for American liberals to ask who are to constitute it, and whether it is desirable to send delegates before such steps are taken.

D. M. BENNETT, obscene letter-writer, ex-convict, and chronic beggar, is now begging money from his already well-squeezed constituency, to pay his expenses to Europe to attend the Freethinkers' Convention, to be held at Brussels. A. L. Rawson and other impecunious champions of Bennettism are also imploring the "dear people" for money to send them along with their chief. How proud the Liberalists of America will be to have Bennett appear before a European audience, holding in one hand an execrable photograph of himself, as he appeared in his prison garb, such as he is now advertising for sale, and in the other copies of his Open Letter to Jesus Christ. To make the effect still more striking, he should have pinned on his broad back photo-electrotype copies of his obscene letters to a young lady. With such an outfit, he would convey to the cultured freethinkers of Europe a true picture of the party he so well represents, and which the able Liberalist, B. F. Underwood, has happily styled the "rag-tag and bob-tail" wing of Liberalism. —Religio-Philosophical Journal.

FROM A PRIVATE SOURCE, we learn that the Paine Hall trouble has at last got into the courts. The Lick fund will be hunted up, and a good many other things will be developed which will go to show that there is a "heap" of human nature in man, be he pagan or Christian. The effort to clear the hall of debt by the formation of a stock company and the sale of stock has not proved as successful as the friends of the movement had hoped it would be.

The great mass of rationalists scattered over this continent really have little interest in a Boston hall, though nominally dedicated to a dead patriot and a good man, and only the motive of providing a free home for a pioneer rational paper could bind them together for the discharge of the heavy debt hanging over the building. Boston pride ought to have stimulated her to make that hall a Boston enterprise. But a great many well-meaning people all over the country have been induced to take stock and others to make donations that they were poorly able to spare. Of course the good-will that prompted this action will be its own and only reward. We believe the hall has created so much bickering, dispute, and bad blood among rationalists, that they would to-day be better off, had it never been built.—Seymour (Indiana) Times.

ONE BY ONE THEY PASS AWAY.

Mr. Charles H. White, one of our oldest and most respected citizens, died at his house last Monday, in the seventieth year of his age. Mr. White has for a number of years filled the position of librarian at the Working Men's Institute, and had become so thoroughly a part of that institution that it will be difficult to supply the place made vacant by his death. His remains, according to his last wishes, were taken to the lecture-room of the library, and the ceremony performed by Dr. Richard Owen, President of the Society for Mutual Improvement, of which body the deceased was an honored member. From thence the remains were taken to Maple Hill for interment, being followed to the last resting-place by a large number of friends. We copy from the diary kept by the deceased the following, which will doubtless be interesting to our readers. Mr. White thus writes:—

"I was born at Winslow, County of Bucks, England, March 1, 1810. I grew up in one of the West Midland Counties, from two years old, not far from the Welsh border, in the parish of Cleobury Mortimer, near to the towns of Cleobury, Tenbury, and Ludlow, occasionally visiting my parents who resided in London. I first came to the United States in 1832, to New Harmony in 1837. From my twenty-first year, I have thought that the self-consecration of our being to the pursuit of all excellence is religion; the social state which helps and never hinders this pursuit is freedom; and the securing of both is the work of Free Religion. I have tried to work heart and hand with Free Religion, accepting the clear explanation of THE INDEX: 'To deepen human consciousness of a commanding ideal of human nature, and to stimulate human effort to realize this ideal, both in the individual and in society, through the attainment of larger truth than the world has yet known, grander virtue than men have ever yet practised, wiser social conditions than have ever yet existed. In other words, its work is to elevate the personal and social character of the race, partly by inducing a stronger personal endeavor in the direction of a symmetrical development and noble use of all our faculties, and partly by improving or changing all institutions, laws, and customs, just as rapidly as a possible amelioration of them can clearly be made manifest, and the consecration of all our energies on the higher evolution of humanity in accordance with the laws of universal nature.' And I can, with Lord Bacon's eloquent words, truly repeat at last:—

"And this dear freedom hath begotten me this peace, that I mourn not that end which must be, nor spend one wish to have one minute added to the uncertain date of my years."

"This is what I wish read at my grave or house, and hymn read, or if convenient sung, from the Social Hymn Book; if not, Heber's hymn, 'From Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand.' If fine weather, I wish my coffin to be taken into the lecture-room of the library, to have read and sung what I request; and my coffin to be nothing more expensive than walnut. If my name is placed at the head of my grave,

CHARLES HALLETT WHITE,

Born at Winslow, Bucks County, England, March 1, 1810.
And the extract from Lord Bacon above."

In Memoriam.

The following is extracted from the minutes of an official called meeting of the "Society for Mutual Improvement," held at the Society's room on Tuesday, Oct. 14, 1879:—

We, the officers and the executive committee of the Society for Mutual Improvement, being convened in consequence of the death of our much esteemed and beloved associate, Charles H. White, hereby desire to place on record our high appreciation of his integrity and zealous search for truth as a man, and his untiring energy and faithfulness in the performance of his duty as an officer of the Working Men's Institute, and as an efficient and enlightened member of our Society for Mutual Improvement.

We tender to the bereaved family our most sincere sympathy in this their great affliction, and direct the secretary to hand them a copy of these minutes.

We further request our county paper, The New Harmony Register, to give publicity to this expression of our high regard, well knowing how universally and heartily the citizens of New Harmony will receive and appreciate this testimonial and regard of esteem for the deceased, and regret for the loss which the community have sustained by his death.

RICHARD OWEN, Pres.

JOHN CORBIN, Vice-Pres.

JOEL W. HIATT, Sec'y.

A. H. FRETAGEOT, Treas.

ROSAMOND D. OWEN,

SALLIE R. JACKSON,

ELIZA LICHTENBERGER,

Ex. Com.

—New Harmony (Ind.) Register, Oct. 17, 1879 (just received).

THE MARQUIS OF QUEENSBERRY REJECTED BECAUSE HE IS AN ATHEIST.

In compliance with the Royal proclamation, the Peers of Scotland met yesterday in the picture gallery of the Palace of Holyrood House, the Earl of Glasgow, Lord Clerk Register, presiding.

On the calling of the roll being concluded, the Marquis of Queensberry said: "My Lords, before I record my vote to-day, I wish to make an inquiry as regards the nature of this election. Are we come here to elect sixteen representative peers, or are we simply come together to fill up vacancies that may have been caused by death or retirement? In this latter case, I most distinctly wish to point out to your lordships that there is only one vacancy on this occasion, and not two, as I was informed by a noble duke was the general impression caused by the mistaken notion that I had withdrawn. I beg to take this opportunity of declaring that I have never done so, and therefore, if I lose my seat to-day, it must be understood that I am turned out. My lords, it would appear that certain predictions of the press—some of them most violent and abusive—are not altogether without foundation, when they have lately suggested that at the next election of peers I should be rejected. Is this so, my lords? Is this to be done at their dictation? If so, I must say that I am astonished that this determination has been arrived at without some previous notice having been given me as to the course to be pursued other than that which I have received through the public press. As I said before, there is only one vacancy on this occasion; namely, that caused by the retirement of Lord Sinclair. The course that has hitherto been pursued at these elections is, I believe, based upon the recognition of the principle that peers who have previously sat are re-elected. If on this occasion this principle is to be departed from with respect to myself, I should be acting most disingenuously did I pretend to be ignorant of the reasons which have led to such an innovation upon the regular order of proceedings. The reasons are such as no doubt must occur to all who remember how quite lately a declaration of mine with respect to the religion of this country was received by the Scotch press. In making that statement, I was actuated by feelings of sacred duty to the welfare and advancement of mankind, both in the present and in the future. In attacking that which I believe to be false, I never gave myself a thought nor regarded how this declaration might affect my future prospects, neither do I do so now. But, my lords, I am at a loss to understand how my profession of faith can be construed into a demonstration of unfitness for holding a seat in the House of Lords as a representative of the nobility of this great country. If I am in error in attributing my expected rejection to this declaration of mine, what other reasons can be assigned for the departure from an old and well-established custom? If it is asserted that I have not been regular in my attendance in the House, I can urge that my having been abroad so much the last few years was necessitated by my health. I have to this effect certificates from the best doctors in London, and I hope it will not happen again. My lords, the odium theologicum, that appears to be so strong even in the higher places in Scotland at this late period of the nineteenth century, may possibly be surprising to some to whom the religion of this country is not well known."

The Lord Clerk Register, interrupting the noble lord, said he would venture to point out that it was scarcely competent or desirable to discuss the motives of those who might vote one way or another.

THE MARQUIS OF QUEENSBERRY.—I will just finish what I was going to say. It is most important, and I think it is, perhaps, the last chance I shall have of making the statement before my peers. That any human creature, be he peer or peasant, man or woman, pauper or millionaire, should be visited with pains and penalties because of his or her speculative opinion on a subject whereon but few even among professed Christians are agreed, is a bitter satire on your vaunted liberty. My lords, it is the spirit that lighted the martyr fires of Smithfield, and that led to the stake gallant and noble souls such as Bruno. It is noble company you are placing me in, my lords, and I shall thank you for it. This spirit, had it the powers which, thanks to the great Inscrutable, it has no longer with such force, would have visited upon me more tangible proofs of the honor with which my outspoken, fearless declarations of my unsympathy with this Orthodox Christianity has been received. I have a few words more to say in regard to my politics. I think I have a right to speak on this subject. ["No, no."] At my first election, no question was asked me concerning my political faith, although so much importance seems now to be attached to my religious beliefs. Permit me to add that, were I again re-elected as a representative peer, I should prefer to take my seat on the cross benches of the House of Lords, as I am in no way a political partisan, but am one of those who can see good on both sides. If my speech is not agreeable to the noble lords, I would only add that, much as I should value my reelection as a representative peer, I am none the less certain that the rejection to which I may be subjected to-day is mainly, if not wholly, due to my fidelity to a course that I can honestly and sincerely believe to be that of truth as opposed to error and falsehood.

THE MARQUIS OF LOTHIAN.—I do not know whether it is worth while to say much in answer to this very painful statement, but I feel that this speech has been made in public and will be reported in the newspapers, and that it is as well to say a few words in reply to Lord Queensberry. I do not mean to enter into argument in regard to matters which have been decided for many hundreds of years in this country. The noble Marquis began by asking whether there were vacancies, or whether there was to be a reelection of all the sixteen peers whenever there is a dissolution. All the peers who were previously elected have to be submitted for reelection or rejection as the case may be. And it is perfectly competent for the peers of Scotland to elect or not elect at all.

THE MARQUIS OF QUEENSBERRY.—Is it not customary, to reject?

THE MARQUIS OF LOTHIAN.—I am only saying, what every person knows, that, when the question comes before us at the beginning of a new Parliament, it is our duty to our country and ourselves to consider who are the most fit to represent us in the House of Lords, and on this occasion the noble Marquis has stated in plain terms that, if he is not re-elected as your representative, it will be owing to the public announcement which he has made. He says the reason why he has not been chosen—and I trust he will not be chosen—is to be found in the public announcement which he chose to make in the newspapers. But, when the noble Marquis has the presumption—I can use no other word—to tell your lordships that it is because you have seen abuse of him in the press that you will probably come to the conclusion that he is not a fit representative, I think his words should not pass without notice, and I tell him that he has been presumptuous in telling his brother peers that they have acted in that way. I do not know, but I suppose there are some here who know, that the reason the noble Marquis gives is that he has denied that he is a Christian. He denies, as far as I understand him, the existence of a God.

THE MARQUIS OF QUEENSBERRY.—I did not: there are Jews in the House of Commons.

THE MARQUIS OF LOTHIAN.—If you are going to elect him as one of your representatives, you will find the door of the House of Lords open to him. The House of Lords is bound to receive whomsoever we elect. But the responsibility of the election does not lie with the House of Lords, but with us; and, if you elect as your representative the noble Marquis, you will elect as one of your representatives an absolute negation not only of what you and myself esteem, but of what all the people of this country hold most sacred and most dear. [Cheers.] I hope your lordships will not do this.

The election was then proceeded with, signed lists being handed in for a number of peers, and at the close the Clerk Register announced that the following peers had been elected: The Earls of Mar and Kellie, 53 votes; Morton, 52; Strathmore and Kinghorne, 51; Haddington, 53; Airlie, 57; Leven and Melville, 45; Selkirk, 54; Dundonald, 51; Viscount Strathallan, 52; Lord Forbes, 52; Lord Saltoun, 52; Lord Elphinstone, 54; Lord Borthwick, 44; Lord Blantyre, 52; Lord Colville of Culross, 52; Lord Balfour of Burleigh, 52. The result of the election is that the Earl of Leven and Melville and Lord Borthwick take the places of Lord Sinclair, who retires, and the Marquis of Queensberry. The last-named nobleman, who did not vote, received votes from the Duke of Roxburghe, the Earl of Caithness, and the Earl of Kintore.—London Times.

THE CATHOLIC CONFLICT IN CHARLESTON.

The following circular has just been handed to us for publication, and shows how real is the danger to our public school system from Romanist ambition:—

To the Tax-payers of Charleston: The following article was presented to The News and Courier, and was refused insertion. It is therefore sent around to our fellow-citizens to show them that the press of the city is no longer free.

To enable them to understand the whole scope of the conflict, the protest of the minority of the School Commissioners is appended.

The Fight between the Public Schools and Romanism.

We have been reading in the newspapers of the efforts of the Roman Catholics in France, Italy, Prussia, and Belgium to get possession of the school systems of those various countries, having no apprehension of such efforts here. But the action at the last meeting of our City Board of School Commissioners has informed us not only that an attempt would be made here to make the public schools tributary to the Roman Catholic Church, but has shown us that that attempt has been made, and has proved successful. A separate school, composed entirely of Roman Catholic teachers, selected by a Roman Catholic organization, has been accepted by the board, and thus the first gun has been fired in this battle in our State.

Of course, other sects or organizations can follow this precedent; and every one can see that it must lead to the establishment of sectarian schools, and to the destruction of the entire public school system.

What is the remedy? The most regular and natural would be to reform the board, by electing men of more enlarged views. But that cannot be done for four years, under existing laws.

The only course left is an appeal to the courts and the legislature. All of us know the delays incident to legal proceedings; and the more speedy and effective course would therefore be a direct appeal to the legislature. We would suggest, then, to the friends of the public schools, that petitions should be got up to be presented to the legislature at the next session, praying that body to take the matter into consideration, and to reverse the action of the Board of Commissioners by appropriate legislation.

FRIEND OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Protest of Minority.

The undersigned, members of the City Board of Public School Commissioners, do protest against the action of the majority of said board, adopting the proposal of the Rt. Rev. P. N. Lynch, Bishop, and other members of the Roman Catholic Church, to establish a separate public school under teachers nominated by them, for the following, among other, reasons:—

1. Because such a scheme of public education is directly opposed to the cardinal principle of American State policy, which makes a broad and distinct separation between Church and State.

2. Because the acceptance by this board of a distinct and separate school, in which the teachers have been nominated by an organized body, consisting of the bishop and other members of the Roman Catholic Church, and are to be paid from the public school tax, is an infringement of the 5th Section of the 10th Article of the State Constitution.

3. Because the public school system rests upon the foundation principles that no sect of any kind shall have any advantage or preference over any other, and that no sectarian or separate religious teaching shall be promoted by means of the public money; that the acceptance of this school upon the terms agreed upon is a denial of these principles, and, under the plea of protecting the rights of the Roman Catholic, forces the Protestant or other dissident to support a school whose teachers are to them a living lesson of erroneous teaching.

4. Because the surrender of the nomination of teachers by this board to any organized body outside of itself, whether religious or secular, is a violation of law, and a virtual abandonment of the public school system.

5. Because the precedent furnished by the present action of this board is an invitation to every religious sect of social organization to claim the same privilege, and, if pursued, would result in the dissolution of the schools.

6. Because it is not desirable to establish two public schools in such close proximity as the proposed school and the Bennett School. The school buildings erected upon the plans of the existing public schools are far preferable to a building like the George Street School, which was erected for a church, and is wanting in all those conveniences and surroundings which make a site desirable for a public school; and the General Assembly of the State has indicated its preference by directing the rebuilding of the school-house in Friend Street.

7. Because the commissioners of the city schools, from their first establishment, have instituted the policy of opening to women an employment which was deemed suitable to them and beneficial to the public, that the schools have been conducted on this system with great economy, and have given entire satisfaction to the public, while they have opened to the women of our city a field of usefulness and a powerful incentive to improved education. The present action of the board is a departure from this policy, and establishes a new school composed entirely of male teachers, who are all attached to one religious denomination.

8. Because, after a strict examination lately made by this board into the present condition of its finances, it has been found necessary to reduce the annual salaries of all the teachers, in order to bring the expense of the schools within the income provided by the General Assembly; and, in the face of this fact, it is injudicious and inexpedient to assume the support of another large school without any increase of means.

C. G. MEMMINGER.
A. TOOMER PORTER.

JESTINGS.

A MATCHLESS STORY.—One in which there are no weddings.

"TALK IS CHEAP!" Is it? Just hire a lawyer once.—Syracuse Herald.

DURING THE deluge, Mr. Noah was in the habit of calling his wife an ark angel.

"FELLOWS OF THE Royal Society"—The Prince of Wales' personal friends.—Funny Folks.

THERE IS SOMETHING saddening about a pair of scissors. Alas! they only meet to sever!

SPARKING ACROSS a garden fence admits of a good deal being said on both sides.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

TWO TWIN brothers are said to be so much alike that they frequently borrow money of each other without knowing it.

"MAMMA, CAN'T WE have anything we want?" "Yes, my dears; but be careful and don't want anything you can't have."

"BOB, WHAT'S STEAM?" "Boiling water." "That's right. Compare it." "Positive, boil; comparative, boiler; superlative, burst."

COUNSEL (to witness): "You're a nice sort of a fellow, you are!" Witness: "I'd say the same of you, sir, only I'm on oath."

A YOUNG DARWINIAN.—Jack (to his married sister): "Hi! Polly! Look!!! Here's your baby trying to walk on its hind legs!!!!"—Punch.

A MAN WAS sawing wood yesterday afternoon in a back yard. He severed two sticks as thick as your wrist, and then went into the house. "Mary," said he to his wife, "my country needs me: there's no use talking. We've just got to slaughter all these Injuns. No true patriot can be expected to hang around a wood-pile these days." "John," said his wife, "if you fight Injuns as well as you saw wood and support your family, it would take one hundred and eighteen like you to capture one squaw, and you'd have to catch her when she had the ague and throw pepper in her eyes." John went back to the wood-pile, wondering who told his wife all about him.—Salt Lake Tribune.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCEER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.
VITALIZED PHOSPHATES.

This differs from all other Tonics because it is composed of the Vital or Nerve-giving

Principles of the Ox Brain
and Wheat Germ.

Physicians have found it so necessary that they alone have prescribed 200,000 packages. It restores lost energy in all weaknesses of mind or body; relieves debility or nervousness; gives vitality to the insufficient growth of children; strengthens the digestion; cures neuralgia and prevents consumption. It restores to the brain and nerves the elements that have been carried off by disease or overwork.

For sale by Druggists, or by mail, $1.00.

F. CROSBY,
666 Sixth Avenue, New York,
and 137 A Strand, London.

A MASTERLY BOOK.

A TRUE REPUBLIC.

By Albert Stickney.

12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The design of this work is to explain the nature of improvements which the author thinks essential to the completeness of our system of republican government. He describes its various defects, and sets forth in comparison those of systems that have been tried in succession. . . . His style is pointed, vivid, and forcible; his illustrations from recent history are given at considerable length, and will be found highly interesting. The work is valuable as tending to stimulate inquiry into the needed modification of our republican system."—Boston Transcript.

"Able and fearless. It advocates radical changes in our methods of government which are not expected to be secured at once, but approached gradually and surely. One excellent feature is, that it shows how useless it is to look to any other country for more than inferior improvements in our government. It teaches that we must reform our own methods."—N. Y. Times.

"Mr. Stickney has given much thought to the questions discussed in this volume, and has reached some conclusions that differ from those of other writers. . . . The system he advocates is one that will secure the best men and their best work."—Brooklyn Union-Arrow.

"Will set men to thinking."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Mr. Stickney's thoughtful work cannot but command attention."—Troy Whig.

"Mr. Stickney's book will be found very suggestive, and if it sets our people to thinking it will perform a good work. He sketches the different kinds of governments people have lived under, and reviews our own. Every thinking American should read it."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"It is clear, careful, and incisive. . . . We recommend every thoughtful citizen, to whatever political party he may be attached, to get it, and study it well immediately on its issue. . . . His propositions will receive wide attention, and will, we believe, provoke a controversy that will engage some of the ablest minds in the country."—Sunday Call, Newark.

"Sets forth in a very strong and clear light the defects of parliamentary rule in England, and of party rule in this country, showing that they keep the best men out of the public service, and prevent those in the service from doing their best work. . . . The work is strongly written, and discourses with ability a matter of vital importance to the people of this country."—Portland Transcript.

"Many of Mr. Stickney's ideas are most original, and his book is well worth the reading even by one who does not share in his peculiar views."—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

"Mr. Stickney writes with a good deal of vigor, and certainly with entire honesty of purpose."—Buffalo Express.

"There are many excellent suggestions in the work, which deserves careful reading at the hands of those who wish to fully comprehend the condition and requirements of our government."—Boston Post.

"He touches abuses with no sparing hand."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

LIBERAL THOUGHT AND CULTURE.

PAPERS FOR THE TIMES

on Literature, Philosophy, and Religion, edited by WALTER LEWIN. To American readers, this work has especial interest as a singularly able exponent of one of the best phases of liberal thought and culture in England, "written," as the Inquirer says, "in the interests of a Rational Religious Faith and a Spiritual Philosophy." Quarterly Parts, 30 cts. each; Yearly Subscription, $1.00. Vols. I. and II. (forming the First Series), boards, $1.25; half calf, $1.75; calf, g.e., $2.25; Russia, g.e., $2.50 each; or the two vols. bound in one, $2.40, $3.00, $3.50, and $4.00, respectively. In all cases, Carriage Free from Mr. LEWIN, 135 Bridge St., Berkenhead, Eng. Prospectus and Lists post-free. Remittances should be made by Bank Draft, U.S. Currency Notes, or Post-office Money Order.

MR. CHADWICK'S NEW BOOK,
THE FAITH OF REASON.

"Of all preachers occupying regular pulpits as distinguished from lecture platforms, he seems to have completely emancipated himself from pulpit conventions. His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence. . . . When we consider their quality, we marvel, for what sermons of the day can compare with these in richness, force, and beauty?"—Rev. Dr. F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

ESTABLISHED 1846.

FOR

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

23 & 27 Brattle Street, Boston.

ROOMS to LET by the DAY OR WEEK.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

35. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
36. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
37. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
38. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
39. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
40. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
41. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
42. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
43. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
44. Issues of the Age.
45. Buddha and Buddhism.
46. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
47. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
48. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
49. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
50. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

51. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
52. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
53. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
54. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
55. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
56. Issues of the Age.
57. Buddha and Buddhism.
58. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
59. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
60. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
61. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
62. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
63. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
64. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
65. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
66. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
67. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
68. Issues of the Age.
69. Buddha and Buddhism.
70. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
71. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
72. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
73. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
74. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.

75. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
76. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
77. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
78. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
79. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
80. Issues of the Age.
81. Buddha and Buddhism.
82. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
83. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
84. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
85. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
86. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
87. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
88. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
89. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
90. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
91. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
92. Issues of the Age.
93. Buddha and Buddhism.
94. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
95. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
96. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
97. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
98. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
99. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
100. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.

101. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
102. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
103. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
104. Issues of the Age.
105. Buddha and Buddhism.
106. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
107. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
108. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
109. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
110. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
111. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
112. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
113. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
114. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
115. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
116. Issues of the Age.
117. Buddha and Buddhism.
118. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
119. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
120. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
121. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
122. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
123. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
124. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
125. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
126. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
127. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
128. Issues of the Age.
129. Buddha and Buddhism.
130. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
131. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
132. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
133. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
134. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
135. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
136. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
137. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
138. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
139. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
140. Issues of the Age.
141. Buddha and Buddhism.
142. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
143. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
144. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
145. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
146. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
147. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
148. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
149. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
150. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
151. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
152. Issues of the Age.
153. Buddha and Buddhism.
154. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
155. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
156. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
157. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
158. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
159. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
160. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
161. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
162. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
163. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
164. Issues of the Age.
165. Buddha and Buddhism.
166. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
167. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
168. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
169. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
170. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
171. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
172. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
173. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
174. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
175. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
176. Issues of the Age.
177. Buddha and Buddhism.
178. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
179. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
180. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
181. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
182. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
183. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
184. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
185. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
186. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
187. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
188. Issues of the Age.
189. Buddha and Buddhism.
190. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
191. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
192. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
193. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
194. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
195. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
196. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
197. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
198. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
199. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
200. Issues of the Age.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.00.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each; 1879, thirty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING

NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. H. Kuyper, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuonen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament. Price $2.00 per volume.—Vol. III., $2.50.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE FAITH OF REASON. A Series of Discourses on the leading topics of Religion. By John W. Chadwick, author of The Bible of To-day. Pages 254. Price $1.00.

"His discourses are prefaced with no Biblical texts, and exhibit little or nothing of the tone and style which we are wont to associate with pulpit-teaching. Free, original, brave, manly speech is here; never prosy, always earnest, often curiously apt, and sometimes swelling with its theme into fervid eloquence."—Rev. Dr. Hedge, in the Unitarian Review.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.00.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions, $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. . . . a complete index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Enquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.00. Half calf, $6.00.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

THE REIGN OF THE STOICS. By Frederick Moll Holland. Cloth, 12mo. 284 pp. Price $1.25.

A thoroughly accurate, well classified, and valuable compend of the Stoic teachings in philosophy, ethics, and religion, together with a fine summary of their history as a system. No better book on the subject can be found.

THROUGH ROME ON. A Memoir of Christian and Extra-Christian Experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Cloth, 12mo. 362 pp. $1.75.

An able and candid book.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

For the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 9,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON ENGLISH

AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL. 27TH YEAR. A family and day school for both sexes. Boys and girls fitted for Harvard, Smith's, or other Colleges, and for Scientific Schools; also for teaching, business, and home life. Pupils distributed in four families. Board and tuition from $350 to $450. For Circular address NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time; What do they promise for Man?
2. The Birthplace and Cradle of our Civilization; or, the Indebtedness of West to East, to Asia.
3. The Labor Question.
4. The Mission of the New Thought not to Destroy but to Fulfill.

STUDIES IN ANCIENT LITERATURE.—Four Lectures.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East, India, Persia, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Greek Wisdom, or Pythagoras and his Institution.
4. Greek Religion and Mythology

REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF OUR TIME.—Three Lectures.

1. Huxley.
2. Max Müller.
3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., address CHARLES DEB. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

Beautifully Illustrated.

35TH YEAR.

The Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest Inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS.

In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had thirty-five years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all Inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,

MUNN & CO.,

37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, cor. F & 7th Sts., Washington, D.C.

THREE DAY CIRCULATION

GTU Library
2400 Ridge Road
Berkeley, CA 94709
For renewals call (510) 649-2500
All items are subject to recall.

